State takes waste fight into courts

The Associated Press

WIPP delay – C4
Andrus' address – C1

Attorneys for the state of Idaho filed new written arguments in federal court on Wednesday in their latest attempt to block new shipments of high-level radioactive waste into the state.

And Gov. Cecil Andrus took his campaign against federal nuclear waste management tactics into the back yard of the Washington, D.C., decision-makers siding with the Colorado utility that wants to temporarily store 300 tons of its waste at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory.

"We have begun to believe that when the Department of Energy says 'temporary storage' it means a nuclear half life of 25,000 years," Andrus told the National Security Industrial Association during its environmental symposium in the Washington suburb of Tyson's Corner, Va. "The federal government is attempting to stampede states' rights for the sake of expediency."

In U.S. District Court in Boise, state lawyers asked Judge Edward Lodge to bar any further waste shipments from Public Service Co. of Colorado's decommissioned Fort St. Vrain reactor near Denver until the INEL obtains a state air quality permit for its storage facility. No hearing on the issue was set, however.

The Energy Department, which has prevailed in two previous attempts by Andrus to have the federal courts block the shipments, maintained the facility already complies with environmental laws and no permit is required.

But the state claims the department's own "Tiger Team" inspectors earlier this year found operations at INEL "blatantly out of compliance with both state and federal air quality laws."

After the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals on Sept. 20 voided a court order that had blocked the shipments since last winter, the Energy Department and utility moved as quickly as legally possible to dispatch the first of more than 200 truckloads of reactor core material to the INEL.

It arrived last weekend, breaking the ban on out-of-state waste shipments to INEL that Andrus successfully maintained for over two years.

Bush cites 'confidence' in Thomas

The Associated Press

Why she stayed – A4

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Wednesday declared he still had "total confidence" in Clarence Thomas and called his embattled Supreme Court nominee to the White House for a picture-taking session in a public display of support.

It was the first glimpse of Thomas since a former assistant's allegations of sexual harassment against him were made public last weekend.

Thomas smiled for photographers and said he was feeling fine on the day after the Senate delayed his confirmation vote pending public hearings on the allegations against him.

Asked if he would be able to refute the accusations, he responded, "Just testify. Thanks."

The Senate Judiciary Committee will begin hearings on Friday and hear testimony from Thomas and Anita Hill, the Oklahoma law professor who made the allegations. It also will hear from at least two other witnesses, according to the panel's chairman, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del.

"The process is simple and straightforward, it is to focus on the issue of whether the allegations that Professor Hill has made are true," Biden said. He said both Thomas and Hill will be allowed to produce witnesses to support their accounts of what happened a decade ago when she worked for him at the Education Department and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The hearings could last through the weekend depending on the number of witnesses, a committee aide said.

Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., Thomas' chief Senate supporter, said the conservative 43-year-old appeals judge would "look the American people in the eye" and deny he said or did anything improper to the former aide.

Judge says no parole for Charboneau; mother vows he'll appeal life sentence

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

JEROME – Jaimi Charboneau now faces life in prison with no chance for parole for the 1984 murder of his former wife.

"Life is simply too precious. It's all we have," 5th District Judge George Granata said before pronouncing the life sentence Wednesday afternoon in the Jerome County Courthouse.

Charboneau, 31, vowed to appeal the sentence to the Idaho Supreme Court. His attorneys must file that appeal within 42 days.

"I accept full responsibility for what occurred on July 1, 1984. If I could take back the events of that tragic day, I would," Charboneau said, choking back tears.

It is the second time Charboneau has been sentenced for the slaying of his ex-wife, Marilyn Arbaugh of Jerome.

In 1986, 5th District Judge Phillip Becker sentenced Charboneau to death after a jury found him guilty of first-degree murder. The Idaho Supreme Court upheld the verdict but rejected the death sentence.

The death penalty is still the appropriate punishment for the "cold, cowardly murder," special prosecutor R. Keith Roark of Hailey said. But Roark decided last month to avoid the inevitable appeals and additional court costs that would accompany a death sentence.

That left Granata with only two choices: an indeterminate life sentence under which Charboneau could have had a parole hearing as early as 1994, or a fixed life term.

The judge cited Charboneau's inability to fully admit to the killing over the past seven years as one reason he believes there is little hope for rehabilitation.

"The defendant is unable to confront the truth. ... He confronts the truth only tangentially," Granata said.

The truth, Roark said, is that Charboneau executed Arbaugh at the Jerome ranch where she lived.

After Arbaugh was wounded and Charboneau stood over her kneeling, bleeding figure with a loaded .22-caliber rifle, Roark speculated that she begged for mercy just as Charboneau was asking the court for mercy on Wednesday.

"The defendant answered her pleas for mercy with the kindness of gunpowder and lead," Roark said.

Charboneau and Arbaugh were married for a year before divorcing in June 1984. On July 1 of that year, police found Charboneau waving and whistling at them.

Project of 4-plexes may be next

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – If eight-plex apartments are out, four-plexes might be coming soon to a neighborhood of single-family homes in north Twin Falls.

"I got the distinct impression that they will go ahead and plat it," LaMar Orton, the city's community development director, said Wednesday of the complex's developer, Pacific Housing Association.

The Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission rejected by a tie vote Tuesday night a proposal by the Oregon company to change the area's zoning so it could build a 160-unit complex of eight-plexes for low- and moderate-income people.

Neighbors of the 10-acre site, located between the 1200 and 1300 blocks of Locust Street, didn't like the idea because it would have meant heavier traffic, overcrowding at nearby Sawtooth Elementary School and lower property values for the owners of homes in the area.

Idahoans' per capita tax below average

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Americans paid an average of $1,211 in state taxes last year, with one-third of the total collected as general sales taxes, the Census Bureau reported Wednesday.

State tax collections passed the $300 billion mark last year for the first time, up 5.7 percent from the $284 total in 1989, the bureau said.

Idaho posted one of the largest percentage increases in tax revenues over the period, bringing in $1.14 billion in taxes. That came in spite of a number of multimillion-dollar tax cuts approved by lawmakers and no tax increases of any moment in either 1989 or 1990.

Analysts said it was further evidence of the strength of the Idaho economy, which has produced jobs faster than nearly every other state in the nation.

On a per capita basis, Idahoans paid $1,131 in taxes in 1990, the Census Bureau said.

That included $381 in sales taxes, $400 in individual taxes, $107 in gas taxes, $56 in license tags, and other unidentified miscellaneous taxes.

Of the $300.5 billion in state taxes collected nationwide, $99.7 billion was in sales taxes, $96.1 billion individual income taxes, $21.8 billion corporate income taxes, $19.4 billion sales taxes on gasoline and $9.8 billion collections from the sale of motor vehicle licenses.

Most of the remainder came from taxes on insurance ($7.4 billion), public utilities ($6.5 billion), property ($5.8 billion) and extraction of minerals ($4.7 billion). The Census Bureau said miscellaneous taxes, including levies on alcoholic beverages, tobacco and estates, produced $29.3 billion.

Heavy rain continues to fall in soaked southern Florida

The Associated Press

Heavy rain continued to fall Wednesday in southern Florida, where areas had been drenched by nearly 20 inches in two days.

Skies were clear or partly cloudy over much of the rest of the nation.

Hollywood, Fla., received 14 inches Tuesday, followed by nearly 6 inches through Wednesday morning. Miami received 8.5 inches by Wednesday, more than the 7.25 inches the city usually gets during the entire month of October, the National Weather Service said.

Residents of Dade and Broward counties were trying to clean up from Tuesday's rain, which caused widespread street flooding. Authorities advised against fishing and swimming in canals, the Miami River and Biscayne Bay because sewers were overwhelmed by the downpour.

Heavier rainfall during the six hours ending at 2 p.m. EDT included an inch and a third at Key West Naval Air Station in Florida. All other rainfall reports were less than a half inch.

Firm drops abortion law defense

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A law firm hired to defend Utah's anti-abortion law agreed to withdraw from the case Wednesday after the state attorney general expressed concerns about its work for an abortion clinic.

Attorney General Paul Van Dam said it was "in the best interests of the state of Utah to select new counsel in the case." He cited a potential conflict of interest.

The announcement was made just minutes before a federal judge was to hear arguments from American Civil Liberties Union lawyers.

Viking ships reach Washington

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Three Viking ships sailed up the Potomac River on Wednesday, commemorating Leif Ericson's landing in the New World about 1,000 years ago and challenging the 500th anniversary hoopla celebrating that Christopher-come-lately.

The 78-foot flagship Gaia, an authentic replica of the wooden, single-masted Viking longboat, docked at a Georgetown wharf shortly before noon on Leif Ericson Day after a 5,300-mile voyage across the North Atlantic that began May 17 in Bergen, Norway.

The Gaia and two Viking escort vessels that joined the voyage at Nova Scotia were greeted by noisy blasts from ancient Norse birchbark horns and cheers from a dockside crowd that included President Vigdis Finnbogadottir of Iceland and Queen Sonja of Norway.

Also welcoming the modern-day Norse sailors was former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, a Minnesotan of Norwegian stock. Playing it safe, he praised the epic voyages of both Ericson and Christopher Columbus as "victories of the human spirit."

Speaking to a reporter, Mondale recalled being spanked as a child for bragging, but on this occasion he couldn't resist.

"We got here 500 years early," he said, beaming. "We didn't need any money. We just did it."

After the speechmaking and a celebratory lunch, the Icelandic president and Norwegian queen paid a courtesy call on President Bush at the White House, thus deftly upstaging Cristobal Colon, a 20th-generation direct descendant of Columbus.

It isn't until today that Colon, a 42-year-old Spanish naval officer, is scheduled to meet Bush. Colon is touring the United States to help celebrate Columbus Day and launch year-long festivities celebrating the 500th anniversary of his ancestor's landing in the New World.

in a field near the Jerome County ranch where Arbaugh and her two teen-age daughters were living.

The officers also found Arbaugh's body, riddled with up to 15 bullets and lying in a pool of blood near a barn.

Roark called the shooting "a beastly crime" that was made worse by Charboneau's original story that he fired a flurry of bullets in a fit of rage, but Arbaugh's oldest daughter, Tiffi, fired the fatal shots.

Charboneau's mother, Misty Hamilton, told reporters after the sentencing that her son is innocent.

"Jaimi is not guilty of what happened," she said, vowing to hire a new lawyer and pursue the case.

In his brief statement, Charboneau apologized to the Arbaugh family and to his own family for the pain he has caused them.

"I hope they (the Arbaughs) can find the strength to put this incident behind them and live the rest of their lives in peace," he said.

"I'm happy, but I wish he could have gotten the death penalty," daughter Tiffi Chisham said.

Marilyn Arbaugh's father said he will worry about Charboneau no matter what the sentence.

"As long as he's alive, there's always that chance that he'll get out," Jim Arbaugh said.

Pacific Housing, told the planning commission Tuesday night that his company was likely to go for a down-sized project of four-plexes, permitted in the area under current zoning law, if it couldn't build the eight-plexes.

Neither Burke nor other officials of the company could be reached for comment Wednesday, but several met with Orton Wednesday morning.

The Locust Street property is already zoned for four-plexes and duplexes with a little more than one acre zoned for commercial use. Pacific Housing could put an eight-plex or higher-density development on the commercial land, Orton said.

A spokeswoman for residents of the area, Shawna Fuller, said Wednesday people living there would not object to a smaller project in their neighborhood.

"We are not opposed to low-income housing. ... But I don't think it is fair to low-income people to house them in high-density units," Fuller said.

Housing low-income people in high-density units isolates them from the rest of the community, Fuller said. Building smaller projects in several areas of the city would give low-income people a chance to become part of the community, she said.

Area residents likely would not fight a project of 40 units, Fuller said.

"But if they come back and want to build a congested four-plex, I'm sure we would fight it," she said.

Taxes

One-third of total state collections were in four states: California, $43.4 billion; New York, $28.6 billion; Texas, $14.7 billion; and Florida, $13.3 billion.

The federal report said the largest increase in state taxes last year was a 17.8 percent rise in Montana, $858 million compared with $728 million in 1989. Nevada registered a 10 percent gain, $1.58 billion compared with $1.36 billion.

Increases of 10 percent or more also were recorded in West Virginia ($2.23 billion last year), Washington ($7.42 billion), Georgia ($7.1 billion) and Idaho ($1.14 billion).

Collections dropped in five states. Revenues in New Hampshire fell 2.9 percent, to $595 million; Maine 1.9 percent, to $1.56 billion; New Jersey 0.6 percent, to $10.4 billion; Virginia 0.3 percent, to $6.6 billion; and Delaware down 0.1 percent, to $1.13 billion.

Nuclear installations become dismantling centers

The Associated Press

Caught off balance by President Bush, defense installations that have battled since World War II for billions of dollars to build nuclear weapons are hurriedly being transformed into centers for taking them apart.

Bush stunned the defense industry and nuclear weapons critics last month by announcing a plan for unilateral nuclear cuts and new negotiations with Moscow to reduce nuclear arsenals.

With many nuclear weapons being reined in, the need for producing more of them has been thrown into doubt.

The president's move came as a surprise, and defense contractors are rushing to become the focus for dismantling weapons, said Tom Zamora, a research analyst for the environmental group Friends of the Earth.

Other plants that can't reprocess bombs are competing for the estimated $100 billion needed for cleaning up the environmental mess from more than four decades of weapons production.

"Everybody wants to be the dismantling center," Zamora said. "Pantex wants the job, Savannah River wants the job, and Rocky Flats wants the job. Everybody knows this is where the big bucks will be for the next few years."

Modernization of the arsenal will continue, even if production of new weapons stops, said Deborah K. Smith, a spokeswoman for the Department of Energy, which builds nuclear bombs for the Pentagon.

"It is far too early to speculate on the effect of the president's initiatives on specific DOE facilities," she said. "However, we see no immediate change.The proposals may well lead to a smaller complex consistent with a greatly reduced nuclear stockpile."

Bush said the United States will scrap much of its short-range nuclear arsenal. On Sept. 28, strategic bomber crews across the country ended a 4-decade alert.

The U.S. nuclear arms industry planned to spend $11.8 billion in Atomic Energy Defense Activities in 1992, with $6.7 billion for arms production.

Several thousand of the nation's 6,000-7,000 tactical nuclear weapons will be coming back from Europe, and will either have to be dismantled and stored, or melted down and reprocessed. They include the W-33, W-48 and W-79 artillery shells, the Lance W-70 short-range missile, and the B-61 and B-57 gravity bombs.

Some of the 12,000 nuclear bombs for attacking the Soviet Union may now have to be redesigned. Among them are the W-88, the newest bomb for the Trident nuclear submarine.

Zamora said it no longer makes sense to build extra-powerful weapons for smashing Soviet silos, if the primary focus of the U.S. nuclear defense strategy shifts from war-alert to retaliation, because the United States would only be attacking empty silos.

That means the United States can reuse pits from current stockpiles, even though the older bombs have less firepower.

The short-term effects on nuclear arms spending on the nation's eight major production facilities will be slight, defense industry analysts said. But over the long-term, many workers with specialized skills may be looking for new jobs.

• Los Alamos National Laboratory at Los Alamos, N.M., and Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory at Livermore, Calif., probably will change their focus from designing new bombs to redesigning the current arsenals to make them safer.

Several bombs including the W-88 for the Trident, the W-78 for the Minuteman 3, and W-76 for the Trident 1, lack insensitive high explosives, which are less susceptible to a fire, and could be rearmed. However, the two labs could be combined, saving money, while keeping the competition the DOE says is necessary for reliability.

• The Rocky Flats plant at Golden, Colo., has been shut down for almost two years because of safety problems. It produces plutonium pits that serve as triggers for hydrogen bombs, and atomic bombs for tactical nuclear weapons.

However, with 2,200 W-68 nuclear warheads from the Poseidon missile being retired, those pits and others could be reused and there may be no need to reopen the plant.

Robert Nelson, head of DOE operations at Rocky Flats, has said he would like to see the plant become a center for dismantling nuclear weapons. But serious radioactive contamination problems and aging equipment plague the plutonium-reprocessing plant, and that plan is in doubt.

• Pantex Plant, Amarillo, Texas, is the assembly plant for nuclear weapons. Bombs returing from Europe will be sent there for dismantling, but the plant doesn't have a reprocessing capability for the radioactive components. Because of the unexpected influx, its role will probably be enlarged.

• The Nevada Test Site northwest of Las Vegas probably will switch from testing new weapons to testing pits for reuse. In addition, if other bombs are redesigned for safety reasons, those bombs also will have to be tested.

• Sandia National Laboratory, Albuquerque, N.M., builds electronic firing systems, and probably will concentrate on making existing weapons safer and more reliable.

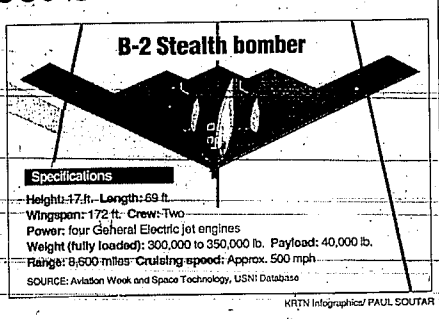
• Savannah River, Aiken, S.C., is the only plant for production of tritium, a power booster for atomic weapons. Tritium decays at a rate of about 5 percent a year and has to be replaced, but with thousands of weapons coming home, and a stockpile of tritium expected to last two years, the need to restart the K-reactor for producing tritium and plutonium is being questioned.

Air Force chief says Soviets could detect Stealth bomber

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force's top officer, in an unusually candid assessment, said Wednesday that Soviet air defenses probably could detect the radar-evading B-2 stealth bomber if it were flying its wartime mission today.

Gen. Merrill McPeak, the Air Force chief of staff, made the comment while elaborating on the Pentagon's standard statement that the B-2 never was intended to be invisible to air defenses but would be extremely hard to track and shoot down.

Questions about the B-2's ability to penetrate air defenses are an important part of debate in Congress over whether the nation should spend the $30 billion more the Air Force says is needed to produce a fleet of 75 B-2s. A decade of developing the airplane already has cost about $30 billion.



KRTN Infographics/ PAUL SOUTAR

In a meeting with reporters at the Pentagon, McPeak was asked whether the Soviets were trying to improve their already extensive air-defense network to the point at which, within 10 years, they would be able to pick up the B-2 bomber. The plane is in the early stages of production and not flying missions.

McPeak, who returned Tuesday from an eight-day official visit to the Soviet Union, said he couldn't offer any details about Soviet air defense improvements. Then he added: "By the way, I expect that certain parts of their air defense setup would be able to detect the B-2 today, so we don't have to wait 10 years.

"No one has ever argued that the B-2 is invisible or immortal," the four-star general said. "What we've argued is that it is a very hard target to shoot down, and I expect that'll still be true 10 years from now."

The B-2 incorporates the latest advances in secret technologies that minimize its "profile" on radar screens and make it unusually difficult to detect the plane by its engine heat or noise. The Air Force says the technologies are far more sophisticated than those used on the F-117A stealth fighter that successfully struck heavily defended targets in Iraq during the Persian Gulf War.

Each B-2 is estimated to cost about $865 million. Doubts about the future of the program have increased since the demise of the Cold War and, more recently, by a disclosure that the plane failed a July 26 stealth test.

McPeak strongly defended the B-2 and said Congress should provide the production funds.

"I'm absolutely confident that we will solve the B-2 problems," he said, referring to the failed stealth flight test. "There's no doubt about that."

McPeak said he saw "no evidence" during his visit to Soviet air bases and other military installations that the Soviets were undertaking a major restructuring of their air defenses to try to cope with stealth aircraft.

Even if they were, he said, the B-2 would not be vulnerable in the foreseeable future.

"We, the U.S. Air Force, know more about stealth than anybody else and we do not know how to defend against stealth aircraft, so if we don't know how to do it, it's not clear to me how anybody else would start on that problem," he said.

Marine-AIDS case settled

BOSTON (AP) — The U.S. government decided Wednesday not to appeal a $3.8 million judgment awarded to an AIDS-infected Marine whose wife and son died of the disease after she received tainted blood at a Navy hospital.

The news ended a five-year court battle for Martin Gaffney, who is hospitalized and sought the money for his 8-year-old daughter.

"I'm tremendously relieved. Obviously it's good to know that my daughter's provided for," Gaffney said. "My wife left this world without that satisfaction."

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of Congress pushed legislation Wednesday aimed at pressuring the nation's credit card issuers into sharing the wealth with consumers by lowering their "stratospheric" interest rates.

Over the past two years, interest rates that banks pay to raise funds, ranging from savings account rates to the Federal Reserve's discount rate, have dropped sharply to around 5 percent.

But average rates on credit cards have actually increased slightly to nearly 19 percent, said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., sponsor of a bill targeting credit card issuers.

Schumer's bill is designed to foster more competition by forcing credit card issuers to disclose their interest rate, annual fee, grace period and other basic information in every print and broadcast advertisement. That would toughen current rules, in effect since March 1989, which require disclosure inside mail solicitations but not in advertisements. Schumer's bill also would require credit card companies to give customers 30 days notice before raising rates, twice as long as the current notice, and to allow customers to stop using the card and pay off their balance at the old rate.

Schumer charged that the "faltering banking industry" was using credit card profits to make up for commercial real estate loans and other ill-advised investments.

Defense: State Department gave away list

MIAMI (AP) — The State Department sent a copy of Manuel Noriega's secret witness list directly to the lead prosecutor in his drug and racketeering case, attorneys for the ousted Panamanian leader charged Wednesday.

Noriega's attorneys want the U.S. Marshal's Service — which was serving defense subpoenas under a judicial secrecy order — punished for allowing the list to fall into the prosecution's hands.

Many witnesses "did not want their identities prematurely revealed out of fear of possible retaliation," said court papers filed by defense attorney Jon May.

The court papers filed with U.S. District Judge William Hoeveler also ask that the Marshal's Service be removed as the defense process server and replaced by a private company. Marshals were working with the defense because Noriega is classified as an indigent defendant.

Women understand why she stayed; men have more trouble

Hill

WASHINGTON (AP) — If Clarence Thomas made unwelcome sexual overtures toward Anita Hill, why didn't she quit?

Why did she follow him to another job?

And why did she never blow the whistle?

Women seem to understand the apparent contradictions as part of the sometimes confounding nature of relationships between working women and their male bosses. Men are more likely to be perplexed.

Hill alleges that Thomas made sexual comments to her, including graphic descriptions of pornographic movies, in an effort to get her to go out with him. Thomas says none of that ever happened.

Hill was a Thomas aide a decade ago at the Education Department, moving with him when he became chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. She is now a tenured law professor at the University of Oklahoma.

Asked why she agreed to be his assistant at the EEOC, Hill said this week that Thomas had stopped bothering her for a while and she thought he wouldn't do it again. Also, she said in her defense, at the age of 25 with little experience and facing a federal hiring freeze, her prospects of finding another job were small.

"Men ought to be able to wrap their minds around that concept," said Robin Morgan, editor-in-chief of Ms. Magazine. "An ambitious young man, abused by his boss — with ethnic jokes or other kinds of abuse — what would he do? He likely would smile, and swallow and try to survive."

Man or woman, "it's fair to assume that any 25-year-old sitting with an enormously powerful man might feel they had to listen to that conversation and couldn't say 'Shut up' without feeling that their jobs would be in jeopardy," said Alison Wetherfield, legal director of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund.

Furthermore, "if you're an assistant to the top person in any organization, where do you go to complain?" she asked.

Sexual harassment, some suggest, is a misnomer.

"It's not about sex, it's about power," said Barbara Otto, national spokesperson for Nine To Five, a working women's advocacy group.

And because the work force is — and has been for hundreds of years — dominated by men, women are far more vulnerable.

"Anita Hill might have thought, 'Hey, this guy is powerful, he's smart, he's basically a nice guy, he doesn't really mean it,'" suggested Otto.

But a man does mean it, she added, if he's asked to stop and doesn't.

Hill, by her own words, was eager to stay in the civil rights field and get ahead.

Because of her ambition, some men suggest, she was willing to overlook what she contends were Thomas' advances.

"What's wrong with being ambitious?" said Morgan. "Why is it considered admirable when a man is willing to jump over all sorts of hurdles to get where he wants to go, but for women it's somehow aggressive and unfitting?"

Although attitudes are changing, many women still harbor the traditional view that sex is somehow unmentionable in society, according to experts on women's issues.

"There's still a lot of pressure on women — and I hear this from my students all the time — not to look too sexual, too provocative," said George Washington University Professor Phyllis Palmer.

Questions surrounding Hill's controversial allegations addressed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here are some questions and answers on central issues in the controversy sparked by Anita Hill's sexual harassment allegations against Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas.

Q. Who is Anita Hill and what are her allegations against Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas?

A. Hill, 35, is a Yale-educated, tenured law professor at the University of Oklahoma. She has accused Thomas of repeatedly asking her out and talking in graphic terms about pornography to her while she was his aide at the Education Department and the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in the early 1980s.

Q. How has Thomas responded?

A. Thomas, 43, a federal judge, issued a sworn affidavit denying any improper behavior on his part and characterizing the relationship between the two as strictly professional. Thomas told the FBI he asked Hill out but dropped his pursuit when she declined, according to published reports quoting sources familiar with an FBI probe of the allegations. Sen. John Danforth, Thomas' main Senate sponsor, says the nominee has said he never asked Hill for a date.

Q. If Hill's allegations are true, would they constitute sexual harassment?

A. Most experts say yes. The EEOC defines sexual harassment as "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature when submission to them or rejection of this conduct explicitly or implicitly affects an individual's employment, unreasonably interferes with an individual's work performance, or creates an intimidating, hostile or offensive work environment." The EEOC says such harassment is a form of illegal sex discrimination.

Q. If Hill was disturbed, why did she follow Thomas when he moved to the EEOC?

A: Hill concedes she may have used poor judgment. But she said Thomas had stopped what she considered his objectionable behavior some time before the move and "I assumed that the activity had ended permanently." She also considered the EEOC job "one of my only real opportunities to engage in civil rights work," she said Wednesday on NBC's "Today" show.

Q. What about that invitation to Thomas to speak at the University of Oklahoma last year?

A. Hill says she did not issue the invitation. She said a campus group invited him and asked her to make a follow-up call to ensure he paid some attention to the invitation. She says she told the group she didn't want Thomas to come, but did make the call as requested.

Thomas

Q. What about the EEOC phone logs that indicate Hill made 11 calls to Thomas between 1984 and 1990, after she had left the government?

A. Thomas defenders say the logs undermine Hill's accusations and bolster his assertion that the two have had "wholly cordial" relations. Hill called the logs "garbage" and said she had not telephoned Thomas except to return his calls, according to The Washington Post.

Q. Why didn't Hill come forward earlier if Thomas' conduct was so upsetting to her?

A. Hill has said she never intended to come forward at all. She said she was contacted by congressional investigators and cooperated on the understanding that her story would not be made public. But her affidavit was leaked to the press and at that point, she said, she had no choice.

Q. Why was the Senate Judiciary Committee keeping her allegations from the public?

A. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell says the Senate's hands were tied because Hill was insisting on anonymity and didn't want her charges aired in public. But some women, including Sen. Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., says a lack of follow-up sent a signal that the Senate wasn't taking the charges sufficiently seriously.

Q. What does the Senate do now?

A. The Senate postponed a vote on the Thomas nomination until 6 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 15. The vote was originally scheduled for a week earlier. But Thomas joined calls for a delay as support for his nomination eroded and it became clear he could lose if the vote were held on schedule. The Judiciary Committee will investigate Hill's allegations at a hearing before Tuesday's vote. Hill, Thomas and others likely will testify.

Thomas incident sparks sexual harassment victims to activism

The Associated Press

Anita Hill is not alone.

Working women around the country have joined her, crossing beyond confusion and fear about sexual harassment to share experiences of their own.

"We've had a real outpouring of calls," said Barbara Otto of 9 to 5, the National Association of Working Women. "It's like they're coming out of the closet to tell their dirty secret. They're saying: 'Enough!'"

But it can be tricky. In the minds of many — men and women alike — sexual harassment remains vaguely defined. The bounds of acceptable workplace behavior often seem murky, and victims unsure when they've been crossed.

This confusion was underscored when Hill's allegations against Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas were made public on the eve of his confirmation vote, and because the Judiciary Committee was accused of giving them short shrift.

"Over the last 10 years, men and women have come to agree that things like grabbing and touching constitute sexual harassment," said James Gruber, a University of Michigan sociologist and expert on workplace harassment. "But men still don't see the gravity of a whole other range of behavior."

Innuendo, off-color remarks and spreading rumors count, too.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission defines sexual harassment as any sexual advance, request for sexual favor, sexual remark or conduct that affects job or promotion decisions, interferes with work performance or creates a hostile, offensive or intimidating atmosphere.

That last bit is significant. The vast majority of victims decline to report clear-cut cases of being touched or threatened with a demotion. Even fewer are likely to stand up against subtler but no less inappropriate workplace behavior.

A 1987 study of federal government employees showed that 42 percent of women and 14 percent of men said they'd experienced some form of uninvited and unwanted sexual attention. But only 15 percent of women and 7 percent of men said they'd reported their allegations to a boss or other officials.

Many figure it's part of the game. "They think, well, this is life," said Lynn Hecht Schafran, an attorney with the NOW Legal Defense and Education fund.

"You just have to put up with people patting you on the fanny, making comments about your body or having pornography in the workplace."

But Hill's allegations, and accusations that the Judiciary Committee failed properly to investigate them, have brought to a boil anger about sexual harassment — and the silence that reinforces it.

"Women want to do something," said research director Nancy Kreiter of Women Employed, a Chicago advocacy group that recently has been swamped with calls.

"So many have experienced this but didn't come forward, often because they didn't know the law."

So the questions come. "The phones have been ringing for the last couple of days, specifically on this issue," said Gloria Hole, a senior compliance officer with Rhode Island's Human Rights Commission, where inquiries have jumped from several to more than a dozen a day.

Hill labeled quiet but tenacious

MORRIS, Okla. (AP) — Anita Hill, whose allegations against Clarence Thomas have at least delayed his Supreme Court confirmation, never sought the limelight but also didn't back down when she believed she was right, her college roommate said Tuesday.

"She was never a quitter," said Susie Clark, a special education teacher at Morris High School. She and Hill graduated 18 years ago from the school in this one-stop-sign town 40 miles south of Tulsa, and they were roommates during their junior year at Oklahoma State University.

Hill, now a University of Oklahoma law professor, has told the Senate Judiciary Committee that Thomas harassed her with talk of sex and pornographic movies when she worked for him at the Education Department and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The Senate on Tuesday postponed for a week its vote on Thomas' confirmation to investigate Hill's allegations, which Thomas strongly denied.

Clark said that during the year they lived together in college, Hill was active in several groups. She said Hill mostly kept to herself "unless something gave her cause to say something."

"She never did seek out publicity and I don't believe she did this time," Clark said. "She was quite a leader, but she wasn't an instigator. She was always good at defending herself. I always thought a lot of her for that."

Although Clark said it has been several years since she last saw Hill, she resents seeing her longtime friend under such public scrutiny.

"I've never had any reason to doubt her word," Clark said.

Principal Jim Ledford came to Morris High School the year after Hill graduated as valedictorian. He had not heard of her until Sunday, but since has reviewed her file several times for reporters.

"The tone of the teachers who knew her has been nothing but positive," Ledford said.

Ozone depletion worse than expected

WASHINGTON — Only a day after saying that this year's ozone depletion at the South Pole was the fourth worst on record, NASA refined its data to say Oct. 6 probably was the worst day it ever recorded.

On that day, the space agency's Nimbus-7 satellite measured ozone values as low as 110 Dobson units, where they had been near 200 in mid-August. Dobson units are a measure used for ozone concentrations.

The ozone hole is an area of 8 million square miles over the Antarctic continent. Ozone in the upper atmosphere is important to humankind because it acts as a shield against the sun's ultraviolet radiation, which can cause skin cancer and harm some plants.

Glad bags removes biodegradable label

WASHINGTON — The government on Wednesday charged the maker of Glad trash bags with failing to adequately substantiate claims that the bags will decompose when thrown away.

The Federal Trade Commission said First Brands, the Danbury, Conn., company that makes Glad, did not have an "adequate scientific basis for its claims" that the bags will decompose.

The company signed an FTC consent agreement to avoid costly litigation. Under the agreement with the FTC, First Brands could say that its bags are designed to break down when disposed of in programs for yard waste, but it must tell customers that such programs are limited and that the bags are not designed to degrade in landfills.

4 boys charged with felony vandalism

ORANGE PARK, Fla. — Four boys, ages 4 to 6, have been arrested on felony vandalism charges after causing up to $10,000 in damage to a vacant house by smearing motor oil on walls and carpets and breaking fixtures.

The mother of two of the youngsters said the criminal mischief charges were unnecessary.

"There was no reason for this to happen. My boys didn't know they were doing anything wrong. They thought they could use the house as their club house, and they were decorating it," said Lori Collins, whose 4- and 6-year-old sons were arrested Sunday night.

Magazine lands rights to general's book

Schwarzkopf

NEW YORK — Newsweek has acquired first serial rights to Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf's autobiography and will publish a 10,000-word excerpt a week before the book's publication next fall, it was announced Wednesday.

The commander of allied forces in the Persian Gulf War retired from the Army in August and is writing the book with a co-author, journalist Peter Petre. Bantam Books reportedly paid nearly $6 million for the book.

Stuart Applebaum, a spokesman for Bantam, said the book is as yet untitled.

India refused to sell technology to Libya

WASHINGTON — Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi more than a decade ago tried to buy nuclear technology from India but was refused, Indian Ambassador Abid Hussain said Wednesday.

"At one point of time Mr. Gadhafi was prepared to give us all the money we needed to wipe out our foreign exchange deficit if we would only give them nuclear technology," Hussain told reporters.

"We did not give it to them ... India has neither imported nor exported any nuclear technology to anybody," he continued.

FDA approves DDI despite some doubts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Food and Drug Administration approved a second AIDS-fighting drug Wednesday despite lingering questions about its safety and effectiveness.

AIDS activists hailed the approval of didanosine, or DDI, as a milestone in the effort to get new drugs from the laboratory to patients. But some scientists said the FDA had set a dangerous precedent in its drug-approval process. The approval was based on less scientific data than normally required, but FDA Commissioner David Kessler said that had to be balanced against the needs of dying AIDS patients.

"It is the victims of this dreaded disease who are uppermost on our minds," Kessler said at a news conference.

DDI was approved to treat AIDS patients who don't respond to or can't tolerate AZT, the only other fully approved anti-AIDS drug. Both drugs act similarly to slow progression of AIDS, but neither cures the disease and each can have serious side effects.

"There are still many unanswered questions," said Dr. Anthony Fauci, head of the National Institute on Allergy and Infectious Diseases, adding that studies testing DDI's long-term safety and effectiveness were continuing.

The drug was developed by the National Cancer Institute and has been licensed to Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., which will market it as Videx. Bristol-Myers said it had two programs to help people with limited resources get the drug.

The AIDS Action Council, a group of activists, said the FDA had "sensitively balanced a strict scientific standard against the needs of people with no treatments for a life-threatening illness."

BSU Foundation makes worst of bad situation

The Boise State University Foundation fessed up Wednesday to what it spends on coaches and administrators, and it must have sent blood pressures soaring in faculty lounges and classrooms all across campus.

In a full-page ad in the Idaho Statesman, the foundation – a private, non-profit corporation that raises money for the university – laid out its contributions to keeping BSU's Cadillac athletic program running on all its gold-plated cylinders.

It made fascinating reading, especially at an institution at which growth has far outpaced academic quality.

Some highlights:

• The foundation set up a supplemental retirement plan for Bobby Dye, in his ninth year as basketball coach, which included $21,000 per year for 10 years and which was to pay him for 15 years after retirement. But it was discovered that created a tax liability for Dye, which he wasn't able to pay, so the foundation gave him $155,160 and a later payment of $73,793 for a total of $228,953.

• A similar fund was set up for Skip Hall, head football coach, calling for payments of $10,000 per year into a fund that Hall can use upon retirement only if he remains head football coach for at least 10 years. Hall is in his fifth season. It did not create any tax liability.

• An agreement with Athletic Director Gene Bleymaier provided for $7,000 per year to be paid into a supplemental retirement fund over a 10-year period. But it was discovered that would give Bleymaier tax liabilities similar to those of Dye. The foundation said it decided to make the annual payments directly to Bleymaier and let him pay tax on it and invest the money himself.

• The foundation said it started making discretionary payments to recently ousted President John Keiser in 1978 of $3,000, along with membership in a private club. "Such stipend and membership enables the president to host some activities in the interest of the university that he might otherwise not be able to do," the ad said. The payments have increased over the years, with the payment for the current fiscal year $17,000.

"... people and activities have certain marketable characteristics which can be measured in hard dollars and the failure to recognize this factor is often the difference between success and failure," the foundation said.

Success or failure on the gridiron or the basketball floor, maybe.

Between 1986 and 1990, student enrollment at BSU increased by 24 percent, but the number of full-time-equivalent faculty grew just 8.4 percent.

In 1973, the BSU library bought 18,543 books. Last year it purchased 11,997.

Boise State has the best bricks and mortar Idaho can buy. It tolerates no mediocrity except in its academic program.

The BSU Foundation was quick to point out that the money it spends on perks for Dye, Hall and Bleymaier came from athletic donors, not those who think they're advancing the cause of learning.

But the evidence is scanty that the foundation is as interested in preparing students to start their careers as it is in ensuring Bronco coaches end theirs in style.

Boise State spends money from all the right people for all the wrong reasons. Its guiding philosophy: Build enough monuments to education, and excellence will follow.

It hasn't followed yet, and the news from the bottom line of the BSU Foundation's report isn't encouraging.

Waste disposal in Idaho an 'act of rape'

William K. Chisholm

This past Saturday morning at the Inkom Port of Entry, I stood in front of a truck loaded with the first shipment of high-level waste from Colorado's Fort St. Vrain nuclear power plant.

It is perhaps symbolic that this waste is shipped in a container that resembles a huge phallus being paraded on a flatbed trailer – for truly, this was an act of rape, of forced entry into Mother Idaho.

This was an act of blatant disrespect and disregard for the sovereignty of the state of Idaho, the efforts of elected officials and the will of our people. Despite knowledge of pending litigation on the legality of storing this waste at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, the Department of Energy took action – shipping the waste, thus putting Idaho in an ex post facto position with regards to our legitimate claims on this issue. It's a bit like abusing your children before a court order can keep you away from them.

Beyond the tyranny of the federal government in this matter is, of course, the question of what does the importation of this high-level waste mean to Idaho and Idahoans politically and environmentally – not only now but into the future, beyond any of our lifetimes. DOE/INEL officials will, as their predecessors before them, assure us there is nothing to be concerned about. They will tell us they have learned from past mistakes and boast of their technical prowess.

We are not talking here of elements with short-lived toxicity but of carcinogens with thousands of years of potency. Man does not have the technical ability to guarantee safe containment of these radioactive nuclides. High-tech or low-tech, the reality is that we are not gods; even our most sophisticated efforts fail – look at the space shuttle Challenger. The Fort St. Vrain power plant from which this waste comes is itself a technical failure.

Politically, the ramifications to Idaho are devastating and we don't have to await technological failure or seismic activity. If the federal government is allowed to so blatantly usurp our will and legitimate efforts for "say" in this matter, then we may as well close the book on constitutional guarantees and state's rights.

We, if we don't fight with every ounce of our will, will have acquiesced our own disenfranchisement. We will not only become a defacto nuclear waste dump, we will become creampuff warriors in battles for control of our air, land and water.

We did not get to this point in our history by accident. We were led here, sold out by corrupt and inept politicians. Nukes and the INEL have been key instruments for enriching the new aristocracy, getting an economic chain around the necks of some of our people. Not only does this political-industrial complex promote, profit from and protect the nuclear agenda, they purposefully stifle debate on this issue. They have squandered billions of our tax dollars to fund their bottomless pork barrels and ask us to pay them for clean up while they yet purpose new waste sources.

This Fort St. Vrain waste is only the tip of the iceberg. Numerous other civilian nuke plants are aging and soon to go off line. Where will the waste go? With no comprehensive conservation and renewable resource-based energy policy in place and an asinine commitment to consumption and generation policies of the past, we are doomed to drown in our own excrement.

On the political/military/industrial side of this, there is both basis for question and evidence that those who make policy also profited from both sides of the U.S.-Soviet arms race. The Soviet expansion being justification for our own production and testing beyond our legitimate defense needs. The waste and mismanagement of that binge is upon us, has been for some time and there is no committed end in site.

We are not alone in this affront to sovereignty – most sparsely populated Western states face similar debasement. The Baltic States West – Idaho, New Mexico and Nevada – are all in the same boat: the forced acceptance of nuclear waste and no verifiable means of safe storage. We must not allow ourselves to be tricked into interstate squabbles but must rise up collectively and force a change in national policy.

No single individual nor organization will stop the rape. It will, of course, take individual initiative and responsibility from thousands. In this age of "freedom" will we who claim to hold the torch sit on our fat and comfortable asses and watch it snuffed out.

Besides Cecil Andrus and Larry EchoHawk, I haven't heard a squeak out of any elected officials. Why not, if you can't handle the job, resign – this is no time for silence.

William K. Chisholm of Buhl was arrested Saturday at the Inkom Port of Entry when he refused to step out of the way of a truck carrying radioactive waste.

Report all the facts

It seems someone as knowledgeable as Mr. James Prunty, a retired Forest Service employee, would report all the facts or at least not distort the truth. Assuming his figures are correct, the livestockmen's $4,900,000 goes to the public lands agency for range improvement and management expenses for the public land agency. The $10 million paid by the hunters all goes to the Idaho Fish and Game Department. None of these funds go to the public land agencies or to private landowners, who furnish habitat for the game and opportunity for the sportsmen.

Shoshone movie disappointing

I was as anxious as anyone else to view the movie about our town of Shoshone. After the movie was over, I was left wondering where Shoshone was. I can't express my disappointment enough in what was a very unfair and one-sided depiction of our town. I could write pages on what we have to offer, but those of us living here are well aware of what we have and the reasons we call Shoshone home.

I can only say that I am proud to call Shoshone my home and that my children were raised here among people who care for us and who have given us every reason to continue to call Shoshone home. I only hope anyone viewing this movie who doesn't know us or our town will do so with an open mind and realize that there are a lot more good points in any place than there are negative.

Looking at the entire picture

This letter is in response to the letter to the editor written Oct. 6 by Mr. Wuerthner.

He speaks of the ranchers' destructive and personal gain by running their cattle on public lands. Sure these people are going to have gain. It is their business and livelihood, the same as any other working American.

What I would like to know is what Mr. Wuerthner's business is and if it would be all right for me or anyone else to condemn it when I know nothing about it.

For one thing, I've lived around ranchers all my life. Sure there is cow dung and trails cut by the cattle, but the desert west of me wouldn't have the water or wildlife that is there without ranchers putting in hundreds of miles of underground water lines and ponds to make this arid environment hospitable for cattle and wildlife.

Another thing is, as far as I know, there are millions of people each year starving in this world. Well, Mr. Wuerthner, since you have all the answers, what should we do? Should we run the ranchers off the lands and lose that revenue and food? And then we could start harvesting all the wild game to replace the food loss from the loss of our cattle.

What I suggest is you better take a hard look at some of the benefits along with the downfalls of any industry before you condemn it.

Waste based on 'bad science'

Regarding the high-level radioactive waste that is destined for Idaho ... what's really amazing is that the waste isn't even from a federal facility. It's from a private, for-profit utility company! Our government is using our dollars to transport and store this waste for a private utility near Denver, Colo.

Back in the '70s, after this for-profit utility started up and was selling electricity, it ran out of room to store its own waste. "No problem," said the U.S. Government, "We'll send it to Idaho." This same thing also happened with other private utility companies, one from as far away as New York! "Send the waste to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory!"

The contract made between the U.S. Government and the Colorado utility was justified at the time by pretending the waste was something the workers at the INEL could study. So Idaho got it, tons and tons of it – waste disguised as jobs!

Much of this was based on bad science. And it is still going on, even now. They promise to clean it up, but they just add to it.

Why isn't our aquifer designated as our Sole Source Aquifer? None of this would be happening if our aquifer and our air had the protection they deserve.

By the way things stand, Idaho's the perfect place for radioactive waste. We already have a working river. (That's what they call it to justify how dirty it is.) So why not working air? And a working aquifer, too? Surely somehow we can say it's all for jobs.

Waste shouldn't be political

Like so many other Idaho residents, I have been half-heartedly following the story of Idaho becoming the nation's dumping ground for high-level nuclear waste.

Now suddenly, reality is starting to set in, and I don't like it.

The federal government is determined to shove this radioactive waste down our throats and obviously doesn't give a damn whether or not we want it.

No one can say for certain what will be done with this waste once it is stored at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory. There are no long-range plans to dispose of it.

There are plans to ship over 200 trucks, each carrying 1,800 pounds of high-level spent nuclear fuel, into our state.

What really brought this to my attention was the picture in Sunday's Times-News showing Bill Chisholm, holding a protest sign, standing in the path of the first truck carrying nuclear waste.

Idaho has a population of more than 1 million, but only one man cared enough to try to stop this shipment from entering our state.

Now I can already hear some of you out there saying, "Oh, look, there's that crazy Bill Chisholm causing a scene and stirring up another commotion." I say go for it, Bill. When the next truck comes, I'll go with you.

I would urge everyone who cares about the quality of life in our state to go also. If you care about the generations to come, do something to show that you oppose the idea of Idaho becoming the nuclear dump site of the nation.

If you aren't actually able to protest, write to the governor and let him know that you support his efforts to stop the shipments. His address is: Capitol Building, Boise, ID 83720. Or call 800-232-4635 and let his office know how you feel.

You can write to Sen. Symms at 509 Hart Building, Washington, DC 20510, or phone his office at 202-224-6142. Sen. Craig's address is 302 Hart Building, Washington, DC 20510. His phone number is 202-224-2752. Let Congressman Stallings know how you feel by writing to him at 1122 Longworth Building, Washington, DC 20515 or phoning 202-225-5531.

I don't feel that this should be a political issue. Democrats, Republicans and Green Party members should all be able to agree on this issue. It's not too late to do something. Let's get together and stop the Nuclear Wasting of Idaho.

Party gathers amid deep domestic crisis

Castro

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuba's Communist Party convenes today, offering President Fidel Castro the option of instituting sweeping reforms to help the country overcome its deepest domestic crisis in 32 years.

But Castro has said he will stand by his revolutionary principles, and most outside analysts believe that fundamental reform is not in the offing.

"He wants people to toe the line," says Jaime Suchlicki, a University of Miami history professor.

But American University's William Leogrande believes that recent events, including Cuba's precipitous economic decline, leave Castro and his party little choice but to opt for reform.

"He's got to start a strategy for dealing with the current crisis," says Leogrande. "It has to be a reform strategy. He can't say, 'We're going to stay the course.'" Leogrande concedes that most Cuba analysts disagree with his thesis.

Cole Blasier, a Cuba expert at the Library of Congress, says Castro believes that a reformist movement will lead to the unraveling of his authority.

"I don't see how, politically, Castro can make far-reaching reforms in the Cuban economy," Blasier says.

A U.S. government analyst, asking not to be identified, says it is difficult to exaggerate the importance of the Congress to the revolution's future.

"What's done at the Congress will be key to the regime's survival," the official said.

Castro need not worry about critical international reporting on the Congress. He is making the conclave a family affair, prohibiting foreign journalists from attending as well as foreign communist delegations.

The collapse of the socialist bloc led to sharp cuts in Cuba's foreign trade, and the result has been an acute shortage of food and other products. Changes in relations with the Soviet Union could mean that Cuba will have to get by on half as much Soviet oil next year as it did in 1989, according to experts. Cuba appears to have no other source for oil because it lacks foreign exchange.

At a rare news conference in Havana this week, Cuban dissidents said the Congress should implement broad democratic changes, including an end to the Communist Party's monopoly on power.

Two weeks ago, Castro once again insisted that the collapse of the socialist bloc and Cuba's declining living standards will not lead to significant shifts when the party faithful, numbering almost 2,000, assembles in the east coast city of Santiago.

"Cuba is not going to backtrack from its revolutionary conquests," Castro said. "Even more revolutionary changes can be expected during the Congress." It will be the first such gathering since 1986.

Leogrande does not accept Castro's hard-line bluster at face value, and he predicts the Congress may ratify some dramatic changes. One option is to permit the service economy to operate on a for-profit basis, he says. Another is to permit farm cooperatives to sell their products at market rates.

Personnel changes may also be in the offing. Among those thought to be vulnerable, according to Suchlicki, are Cuba's aging vice president, Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, as well as veteran Foreign Minister Isidoro Malmierca.

Haitian leader forms interim government, ignores embargo

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Disregarding a 32-nation trade embargo, Haiti's new leader set out Wednesday to form an interim government to replace deposed President Jean-Bertrand Aristide and his Cabinet.

On his first full day in office, provisional President Joseph Nerette was telephoning political leaders to discuss candidates for prime minister and Cabinet posts, said one politician who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Several names were circulating as candidates for prime minister, including a prominent human rights activist, Jean-Jacques Honorat. But Honorat said he wasn't interested in the job. "I know what politics is," he said. "I'm not even tempted. I'm not going to leave human rights for politics."

In Washington, the 32-nation Organization of American States intensified international pressure for reinstatement of Aristide, Haiti's first democratically elected president, who was ousted by rebellious soldiers on Sept. 30. An OAS foreign ministers meeting Tuesday night called for a Western Hemisphere-wide trade embargo and a freeze on Haitian assets abroad. The diplomats also authorized creation of a civilian mission to help restore democratic government.

Cease-fire hasn't slowed Iraq, Kurd clashes

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iraqi troops and Kurdish rebels skirmished in the area of a key northern city Wednesday, the latest in five days of fighting in which hundreds of people have been killed or wounded.

Tens of thousands of Kurds have fled the northern city of Suleimaniyah and surrounding towns since Iraqi bombardments began Saturday. It has been the worst flareup in fighting since troops loyal to Saddam Hussein crushed a Kurdish rebellion shortly after the Persian Gulf War.

The Red Cross has evacuated hundreds of the refugees, a spokesman for the humanitarian organization said Wednesday.

Iraq's state-run newspaper, Al-Jumhouriya, claimed the army had regained control of the area around Suleimaniyah early Wednesday. The two sides reached a cease-fire Tuesday afternoon, but fighting continued well past then.

The United States and its Gulf War allies, who once moved into northern Iraq to protect the Kurds and are now stationed in Turkey, have expressed concern but refrained from intervening.

A Kurdish rebel spokesman, Serchil Qazzaz, on Wednesday decried the lack of Western military aid during the latest fighting. Qazzaz, a spokesman in the Turkish capital of Ankara for the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, said coalition forces reneged on a promise to intercede if the Iraqi army attacked.

Responding to reports that Kurdish guerrillas were massing on the Turkish border for an attack, Qazzaz said only that it was not unlikely.

"We learned that we should depend only on ourselves," he said.

The Kurdistan Democratic Party said in a statement issued in London that sporadic gunfire continued around Suleimaniyah on Wednesday and tension was high, particularly at nearby Dukan Dam.

The Kurds have accused Iraq of trying to cut off electricity in the area by reducing the amount of water behind the dam.

KRTN Infographics

By Marcus Eliason
The Associated Press

JERUSALEM — U.S.-Israeli relations are stumbling from one quarrel to another — over settlements, immigration aid, the peace process, and now the accusation that Israeli warplanes overflew Iraq.

Israeli officials are not concealing their dismay at the nasty change to come over what has been, for years, a close political and military alliance.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's critics say his government is to blame because it is ignoring American pleas to freeze settlement construction in the occupied territories.

But officials close to Shamir claim the United States, in its eagerness to lure the Arabs to a Mideast peace conference, is grabbing any pretext to placate the Arabs by coming down hard on Israel.

The issues in contention:

• THE PEACE PROCESS: Some Israeli officials say the United States may have given the Arabs the impression they will get more than Israel is willing to give, namely, the entire territory it captured from Egypt, Syria and Jordan in the 1967 Middle East war.

The Americans say that through the conference, they are giving Israel what it has always demanded: face-to-face peace negotiations with its Arab adversaries.

• IMMIGRATION AID: Claiming his action will help the peace process, President Bush has delayed congressional consideration of $10 billion in loan guarantees sought by Israel to absorb the Soviet Jewish immigrant influx.

Analysis

Israel is aghast, saying Bush has in effect lent legitimacy to the long Arab campaign to hinder immigration, the lifeblood of the Jewish state.

• SETTLEMENTS: Bush, like previous U.S. presidents, maintains that the settlements being built for Jews in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip are an obstacle to peace. Shamir believes these territories are Israel's by divine right.

• IRAQ: Israel is upset with Bush's Gulf policy on several counts: that he left Saddam Hussein in power; that he portrayed himself as Israel's defender against Saddam when the Israelis believe it was they who did Bush a favor by not retaliating for Iraqi missile barrages; that he does not recognize an Israeli right to spy from the air on its most powerful enemy.

The Americans say the Israeli overflight last week could have jeopardized the U.N. inspectors working to dismantle Iraq's nuclear and missile capability.

The Israelis insist they are trying to avoid confrontation. They note that official responses to American expressions of displeasure have been mild.

Officials are speaking only on condition of anonymity, saying formal statements may worsen the crisis.

Lesser issues also have needled the Israelis. Although they are not fundamental, and officials caution against overstating them, they make headlines in Israeli newspapers and further cloud the atmosphere.

For instance, a big headline in Wednesday's Maariv claimed the United States, in a further effort to appease the Arabs, was delaying implementation of Bush's demand to repeal the U.N. resolution equating Zionism with racism.

On Tuesday, Finance Minister Yitzhak Modai complained about a spate of U.S. media analyses portraying the Israeli economy as a mess. Modai implied that these reports were officially inspired to justify withholding the loan guarantees.

And Israel on Tuesday detained two Palestinians for questioning on suspicion they met with PLO leaders in Algiers. Under Israeli law, contact with the PLO is banned.

The two, Hanan Ashrawi and Faisal Husseini, have met regularly with Secretary of State James A. Baker II, and some Israelis claim they have become a conduit between the United States and the PLO. Nonetheless, the two were not charged or barred from flying to Washington on Wednesday to meet Baker again.

Dore Gold, a U.S.-Israel affairs analyst at Tel Aviv University's Jaffee Center for Strategic Studies, believes all these disputes are linked to the peace conference and the issue at its heart — disagreement over the role of the Palestinians.

If the Palestinian issue scuttles the conference, he said, the Americans "would like to have several fall guys set up." He said the thrust of Bush administration policy has been to make sure the ball is forever in Israel's court.

Spy satellites pin down Iraqi H-bomb project

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Nuclear experts headed for Iraq Wednesday to try to seize evidence of its H-bomb project as spy satellites and planes monitored Baghdad's secret weapons laboratory, officials said.

Iraq has already manufactured some lithium-6, a material used only in hydrogen weapons. The U.N. inspectors hope to capture the supply at the Al-Atbir weapons facility, officials said on condition of anonymity.

The Al-Athir site is being monitored by spy satellites, U-2 flights and other means until the nuclear experts arrive, the U.N. and International Atomic Energy Agency officials said. The surveillance is intended to catch any Iraqi attempt to move the lithium-6 out of Al-Athir or bury it on the grounds.

Iraq was obligated to disclose the extent of its program under the Security Council's April 3 cease-fire resolution, but has acknowledged little and has not commented on Tuesday's disclosure by the IAEA of its lithium supply.

David Kay, one of the IAEA's chief inspectors, said Wednesday that "the purpose of our on-the-ground inspection, as well as our continuing efforts, is to put them out of that game" of producing nuclear weapons materials.

Kay said the H-bomb project could still be under way.

The next team of nuclear inspectors, the seventh so far, left Vienna on Wednesday, the IAEA said. The team is due in Baghdad on Friday and it hopes to remove any remaining lithium-6 from Al-Athir, officials said. The facility is 40 miles south of the Iraqi capital.

When asked if the IAEA would get "tangible evidence," such as lithium-6 or other thermonuclear weapons components, Kay replied, "I'm confident that we will not stop until we have."

Kay said Wednesday that one of the documents his last mission captured in Baghdad on Sept. 23-24 showed the Iraqis were producing "small kilogram amounts" of lithium-6. However, Kay and IAEA director Hans Blix said the Iraqis had "ambitions" for producing over 220 pounds of lithium-6 a year.

Neither Kay nor Blix would disclose how much lithium-6 is needed to produce a working thermonuclear weapon. Michael Brower, a physicist and research director of the Union of Concerned Scientists, said "a few kilograms of lithium-6 is certainly enough to produce a thermonuclear device."

But Brower cautioned that the Iraqis would also need a plutonium bomb to trigger the hydrogen bomb, as well as small quantities of the hydrogen isotopes tritium and deuterium to beginning splitting the lithium, which would then continue the nuclear reaction.

He spoke in a telephone interview from the scientific group's headquarters in Cambridge, Mass.

Gowns save accused

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Judges used their gowns to extinguish flames set by a defendant who doused himself with gasoline after being sentenced to prison, the official PAP news agency reported Wednesday.

The defendant was taken to hospital with severe burns. It did not identify him or say what crime he had been convicted of.

POCATELLO — The head football coach at Pocatello High School, Jim Koetter, has been served a misdemeanor citation charging him with battery.

Lt. Brad Hunt, a shift commander for the Pocatello Police Department, confirmed the citation was served on Koetter, 53, on Tuesday. The complaint was signed by a student, Harlo Miller, who alleged that Koetter pushed him against a wall on Oct. 1.

Koetter is to appear in magistrate court on the charge on Oct. 15. He was head football coach at Idaho State University for five seasons, compiling a 23-32-1 record in 1983-87.

Pirates ax Braves; Drabek injured

The Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Forget the tomahawks. Pittsburgh chopped the Atlanta Braves down to size.

But don't break out the champagne for the Pirates, either. They won Game 1 of the NL playoffs, 5-1 Wednesday night, but lost ace Doug Drabek, for now.

Drabek pitched like a playoff pro for six innings, shutting down Atlanta on three hits. Then, when he tried to stretch an RBI double into a triple, he suddenly strained his left hamstring and was forced to leave.

The shaky Pirates bullpen was able to hold off the Braves this time. Whether it will get another chance to save Drabek is uncertain, pending a further examination Thursday.

At least the Pirates got one good game out of Drabek. That's more than Atlanta got from 20-game winner Tom Glavine as the Braves lost for the 10th consecutive time in postseason play.

Andy Van Slyke, one of the big hitters who slumped in last year's playoff loss to Cincinnati, rattled Glavine with a home run in the first inning.

And within four innings, it was 3-0 and the worst-to-first Braves had gone back to worst again.

Toronto silences Metrodome din

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — The Toronto Blue Jays are ready for some dome doings of their own.

In Game 2 of the American League playoffs on Wednesday, Metrodome magic was simply no match for rookie Juan Guzmán and the Blue Jays' hard-throwing bullpen.

Guzman pitched 5 2-3 strong innings as Toronto beat Minnesota 5-2 to even the best-of-7 series at one game apiece and break the Twins' seven-game postseason winning streak in their high-decibel dome.

Now, it's on to the SkyDome for more turf wars in baseball's first-ever indoor playoffs.

After a day off, the series shifts to Toronto for Game 3 on Friday night. Scott Erickson (20-8) is scheduled to pitch for the Twins against left-hander Jimmy Key (16-12).

"I hope we don't have to come back here," Toronto manager Cito Gaston said. "This is a tough place to win."

The last time the Twins lost a postseason home game was in 1970, when they played at Metropolitan Stadium. But it really shouldn't come as a big surprise they lost to Toronto.

Coming into Game 1 of the playoffs, the Blue Jays had won 10 of 12 games in the Metrodome and 12 of 18 overall against the Twins. Minnesota was trying to tie the record for consecutive postseason victories at home, set by the New York Yankees (1927-36).

"Sure we would have liked to win both games here," Toronto right fielder Joe Carter said. "But realistically this is what we were hoping for. We've played well against them this year."

Guzman, 10-3 after his recall from Class AAA Syracuse on June 4, is becoming something of a Twins killer. He beat Minnesota starter Kevin Tapani for the third time this season.

"Guzman pitched a fabulous game," Twins manager Tom Kelly said. "We got beat by the better pitchers today."

Swift Alomar paces attack for Blue Jays

The Associated Press

Alomar's sprawling lunge for the plate was unsuccessful in Game 1 but good enough for the decisive run Wednesday as the Blue Jays ran the Twins ragged and won 5-2.

Alomar

"That's the game we're going to play," Alomar said. "We're going to run hard and steal some bases."

Joining Alomar's assault has been Devon White, the Blue Jays' leadoff hitter and center fielder. White singled, stole second and scored for the Blue Jays' initial run in the first, then led off the third with a double.

He took third when Alomar followed with a single and they both scored on Kelly Gruber's single. Alomar dived for the plate, threw himself to the foul side of catcher Brian Harper and reached back for safety

Undefeated Bruins face upset-proven Boise

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — More Jim Horner, more Tal Gordon and, hopefully, more defense like last week is what Twin Falls Coach Jon Jund is promising Bruin fans against Boise at 7:30 Friday night.

After a month on the road, the Bruins return triumphantly with a 5-0 record and a chance to cap homecoming in just one of their four home games this season. Only one remains on the slate — Capital here Oct. 25.

Last week's victory over Borah left Twin Falls as the only undefeated team remaining in the Northwest Class A-2 playoff pod. Three teams will advance to the playoffs in early November but Jund wants that No. 1 spot because "our pod's No. 1 seed plays its first two playoff games at home. Then, depending on who the finalists are, the championship games will be played in Boise or the Minidome (ISU's Holt Arena)."

Jund asked Twin Falls fans not to understate Boise's 1-4 record too quickly.

"Through the first four games of the season they simply were beating themselves," he said. "They had from five to seven turnovers in every game — until last week. Then they became the first Idaho team to beat Coeur d'Alene and they did it convincingly at 26-7."

"We told our players Monday 'the sleeping giant has awakened' and they'll be coming down here with a lot of momentum and enthusiasm. They have everything going for them. That big win, the prospect of knocking off the No. 1 team and us having some distractions with homecoming."

"They do a lot of things very well and, as usual, they are very sound defensively. They stay pretty basic, and we won't see a lot of silly defensive alignments," Jund said.

"Offensively, they've moved the ball on everybody. They have a great tight end in Jared Bish, 6-4, 185, who is a college type player. They run the veer with two brothers at running back, Josh King a 140-pound senior, and John King, a 160-pound junior.

The Associated Press

Lakeland of Rathdrum and Castleford moved to the top of their divisions in this week's Associated Press Idaho high school football poll.

Lakeland ended Snake River of Moreland's season-long hold on the top spot in A-2, while Castleford took over in A-4 after dethroning last week's No. 1 team, Mackay.

Idaho's sportswriters and broadcasters kept Twin Falls, Caldwell, Homedale and Garden Valley atop the other four divisions.

In A-1 Division I, unbeaten Twin Falls was the unanimous top choice, marking the first time in school history it has been ranked No. 1 for consecutive weeks.

Glenns Ferry takes perfect record to Gooding

The Times-News

Whatever suspense might remain in the Canyon Conference will depend on how undefeated Glenns Ferry does at once-beaten Gooding Friday night.

The Class A-3 alignment currently has Declo co-leading with Glenns Ferry, and the Hornets hold a win over Gooding. If Gooding should happen to end Glenns Ferry's unbeaten boast, the title race could very well be over.

But if the Pilots can top Gooding, it could set up a championship collision in Glenns Ferry Oct. 25.

While conference titles are nice, the thing teams shoot for is a spot in the postseason playoffs. If form is followed the rest of the season, Declo, Glenns Ferry and Gooding would have the Canyon Conference's three alloted berths sewed up.

Presuming that Declo can beat badly-injured Kimberly Friday night, the other four teams in the alignment would have at least three losses. Should Gooding lose to Glenns Ferry, the Senators still could clinch the third berth with wins at Wendell and Valley in succeeding weeks.

One of the surprises in the Magic Valley season thus far was the relative ease (25-7) with which Declo handled Gooding. Glenns Ferry Coach Bill Brock would like that formula.

"They're as good as ever. They score a lot of points and are a definite challenge to stop," Brock said of the Senators. "They are a really sound defensive team and on offense they run extremely well. The problem is, if you concentrate too much on their running game, they pass better than most high school teams."

One thing this Glenns Ferry bunch has done all fall, however, is respond. The Pilots slipped past Rimrock by one, Kimberly by seven and Valley by four in logging their 5-0 record.

"I feel our players will be up for it. In fact, I know they are looking forward to it," Brock said. "We'll go in with the intention of playing hard and hoping that's good

Drabek expected to return

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Pittsburgh Pirates right-hander Doug Drabek is expected to be available for his next start despite a strained hamstring Wednesday night that knocked him out of the opening game of the National League playoffs.

Drabek was hurt in the bottom of the sixth inning when he tried to stretch a run-scoring double into a triple. He left the game with a 4-0 lead and Pittsburgh went on to a 5-1 victory over the Atlanta Braves.

"After I hit second, I started going because I thought he (centerfielder Ron Gant) had fallen down and I had a chance," Drabek said. "Sometimes I get a little hardheaded. I make a split-second decision and go with it 100 percent. With two outs, it probably wasn't the right thing to do."

As he rounded second, he felt a twinge in the hamstring and was a bit off balance as he slid into third and was tagged out. It initially appeared he had hurt himself while sliding.

"The slide was after the fact," Drabek said. Drabek, who described his injury as "either a bad cramp or slightly sprained muscle," said he really wasn't in pain when he returned to the mound for the top of the seventh inning. However, he felt some discomfort on his first warmup throw and signaled to manager Jim Leyland to call in a reliever.

Smith goes after former teammates

PITTSBURGH (AP) — In his last season with Atlanta, it seemed that Zane Smith would never win. Now, with division champion Pittsburgh, he's having the same problem — only he can't seem to beat the Braves.

Smith, the Brave-turned-Expo-turned-Pirate, will start Game 2 of the National League playoffs Thursday night, and he'd probably rather be pitching against any team in baseball but the Braves.

Smith, who will be opposed by 18-game winner Steve Avery, lives and dies with his sinker. When it sinks, he wins. Against the Braves, he's mostly had a sinking feeling.

The left-handed Smith (16-10) was 0-2 with an 8.59 ERA against the Braves, losing 7-1 on May 19 in Atlanta and 7-3 on July 22 in Pittsburgh. He failed to last past the fourth inning in either start.

Think Smith wasn't secretly rooting for the Dodgers to win the National League West?"The bottom line was I didn't have my good stuff against the Braves," Smith said Wednesday. "For some reason, the Braves had big innings against us. As pitchers, we're going to have to concentrate on not letting that happen."

Smith hasn't had much success at all against the Braves since being traded by Atlanta to Montreal in July 1989. He was 1-1 with a 6.08 ERA against them last year and has given up 16 earned runs in his last 20 2-3 innings against Atlanta.

Behind the Bruins was Capital of Boise replacing Coeur d'Alene at second, followed by Bonneville of Idaho Falls. Coeur d'Alene was fourth, and Highland of Pocatello re-entered in the rankings at fifth for the first time since the first week of the season.

In A-1 Division II, undefeated Caldwell stayed on top with 14 of the 16 first-place votes cast and 77 of 80 possible points, while Skyline of Idaho Falls moved from third to second after its 65-0 romp over Madison of Rexburg last week. Idaho Falls advanced from fourth to third, followed by Lewiston and Post Falls.

In A-2, Lakeland rode its 5-0 record to the top with 14 first-place votes and 78 points. Bonners Ferry moved from third to second, while Snake River dropped from first to third after a 25-15 loss to Preston last weekend. Jerome and Moscow rounded out the top five.

In A-3, unbeaten Homedale got 15 first-place votes and 79 points. Again following in order were Grangeville, Declo, Orofino and Glenns Ferry. Malad, the sixth undefeated team in the top five, moved into a fifth-place tie with Glenns Ferry.

In A-4, Castleford got all 16 first-place votes after 38-0 drubbing of last week's top-ranked team, Mackay. Rimrock of Grand View moved from third to second and Melba from fifth to third, followed by Mackay and Nampa Christian, which replaced Wilder in the top five.

Garden Valley, 5-0, kept its season-long hold on the No. 1 spot by a unanimous vote. Kendrick again was second, but Clark Fork advanced from fourth to third and Carey from fifth to fourth. Council edged into the rankings, replacing Cambridge at fifth.

HAILEY – The Twin Falls Bruins avenged an earlier volleyball loss with a 15-9, 5-15, 15-9 win over Wood River Tuesday.

Jessica Tompkins totalled 15 kills for Wood River.

"I was real pleased with our effort," Goodwin said. "(Setters) Christy Goff and Hazen Poe played well."

ONTARIO – The College of Southern Idaho completed a season sweep of Treasure Valley Community College with a 15-4, 15-12, 15-5 cruise by the Chukers.

North Idaho visits CSI at 7 p.m. Friday for a crucial Region 18 North District matchup.

North Idaho lost at home to Ricks and needs a win to stay in the hunt for one of the two playoff berths.

with the fingers of his left hand. It had everyone remembering the Alomar of Game 1.

"I never practice that kind of slide. I just go out there and do it," he said. "Harper had me played pretty good so I tried to come around him and I did. It's a good slide."

White, who has scored four of Toronto's nine runs in the series and stolen one base, set up one of his runs by taking third when Shane Mack bobbled a single in right field. But he gave credit to Alomar and the aggressive attitude he brings to Toronto.

"You really can't say much more about what he's done for our team," White said. "It keeps the infielders moving and gets those balls going through the holes. It's not the stolen bases; it's the doubles and triples they help make happen."

In Game 1, Alomar tried to score from first on Joe Carter's double, but a perfect relay from Kirby Puckett to Greg Gagne to Harper negated his effort. Third base coach Rich Hacker said he was trying to start up the Blue Jays, who fell behind 5-0.

It backfired. Toronto scored only once in the inning and eventually lost 5-4.

"That's the way we got here," Toronto manager Cito Gaston said. "We're going to get thrown out some. We're going to get picked off. We're going to make some mistakes. But we'll keep doing it."

Pirates

Bonilla — was getting on base. That was a sharp contrast to last October, when they combined to go just 12-for-63 with five RBIs in six games against the Reds.

From the start, the Braves looked like a team that had not won a postseason game since 1958. And Glavine looked like the same guy who's had a 15.34 ERA in the first inning of his last seven starts.

Glavine retired the first two batters, but Van Slyke, who was batting only .194 against left-handers, hit his second home run in seven at-bats against Glavine this year. "I was just trying to get pitches in the strike zone and get some good swings," Van Slyke said.

That ignited the crowd of 57,347, the largest ever to see a baseball game in Pittsburgh, and may have unnerved Glavine.

He threw five straight balls, and the Pirates went on to load the bases on Belliard's error and another walk.

After a visit from pitching coach Leo Mazzone, Glavine managed to escape when Don Slaught grounded to Pendleton, whose throw was neatly short-hopped by first baseman Sid Bream.

Glavine fell further behind in the third inning in the count, and on the scoreboard.

Jay Bell led off with a single and scored on Van Slyke's double. Bonilla followed with a single, and the Pirates wisely, and successfully, tested Smith's weak arm and waved Van Slyke home for a 3-0 lead.

Jays

White had two hits and scored three runs and Roberto Alomar had two hits and scored a run. Each stole a base, too.

"That's our job," White said. "I go out there trying to get to second. We had a young pitcher out there and needed to get his head right."

The Twins looked like they would get off to a quick start again when Guzman walked two in the first inning, but the right-hander quieted the crowd by getting Kent Hrbek on a popup and striking out Chili Davis.

"I used to be concerned about Juan in a situation like that but not now," Gaston said. "You have to be patient with him."

Kirby Puckett, Hrbek and Davis — the 3-4-5 batters — went a combined 3-for-20 in the first two games.

Toronto scored a run in the first when White led off with a single, stole second, took third on Alomar's sacrifice and came around on Carter's single.

The top of the order got the Blue Jays going again in the third when White doubled and moved to third on Alomar's infield hit to third. Alomar stole second and both runners scored on Kelly Gruber's broken-bat single to right. Alomar, thrown out at the plate in Minnesota's 5-4 victory Tuesday night, made a nice head-first slide to avoid catcher Brian Harper's tag.

Bruins

Their quarterback is junior Ryan Brant, a junior, and he throws very well. Their offensive line goes 250, 205, 205, 285, 205."

"Our key is we can't give them time because Brant is very accurate (with his passing)," Jund said. "The other thing is our defense can't let their backs cutback against the grain or let them pop that outside veer. Those brothers have good quickness."

"Basically, we hope to make the quarterback run the football — not because he's bad but because he's the one we're probably most capable of catching," Jund said.

"Defensively, they held Meridian scoreless, held Coeur d'Alene to six and six to Borah. They lost two of the games because of turnovers and the fact Borah and Meridian's defense put two or more touchdowns up by themselves."

"Boise always puts their best three linemen on defense and they have three good ones this year," he said. Those include 215-pound senior tackle Jason White, 200-pound junior nose guard Eric Teixira, and 205-pound senior Adam Schroeder.

"Their linebackers are very quick and active, Jeremy Haener, 205-pound junior, is a boss," Jund said. "Jason Kirkman is a very good linebacker."

"The strength of their secondary is strong safety Eric Alexande , 175-pounds, who is another linebacker really," Jund said.

"Here's a statistic from that Coeur d'Alene game," Jund said to emphasize Boise's abilities. "Coeur d'Alene had the ball just one offensive play in the third quarter — and Boise intercepted that pass."

From a health standpoint, Jund said "everyone appears 100 percent except (senior end) Garth Quigley who probably will miss three more weeks with a broken hand."

"Offensively, we expect to expand Horner's role into the running game a little more again this week. That will take pressure off Tai. Plus, we feel that Jim throws a little better in a rollout situation," the coach added.

enough."

While that key battle is raging, Declo will be seeking to increase its advantage when it entertains Kimberly. The Bulldogs still are in a severe injury-caused manpower depression and will have trouble containing the Hornets' speed.

Valley takes a short hop to Filer where both teams apparently are now doomed to the second division in the standings. Wendell leaves the league schedule to entertain Aberdeen.

The Class A-2 teams remain in inter-district competition with Burley and Wood River leaving the area while Jerome and Buhl are home. Buhl, which is down to about 20 healthy bodies, will entertain Mountain Home in a South Central Idaho Conference game that has no bearing on postseason playoffs.

Jerome will be home to Sugar-Salem, the new A-2 team on the block.

Wood River ventures into the sixth district to play North Fremont while Burley will be at Shelley.

For the second straight week, the Magic Valley Conference spotlight falls on Mackay where the Miners will be entertaining Raft River in a game that could well decide the second league entry into postseason play.

Mackay fell to Castleford last week, a test Raft River faces on the final weekend of the regular season. A Raft River win would put the Trojans in the driver's seat for second place.

Oakley comes off a week's vacation to travel to Murtaugh. Both have lost to Raft River in one shared common opponent. Castleford, undefeated and holding a 3-0 league mark, will play host to Hansen, which is 2-3.

Things are crystal clear now in the Sawtooth Conference. All Carey has to do is keep on winning and it is the champion and will go into the state playoffs in the bracket opposite of highly-regarded Garden Valley.

The Panthers entertain North Gem Friday in what a week ago appeared to be the major confrontation in the league for the year. But that urgency lessened when Sho-Ban came up with a major 18-16 surprise of North Gem.

Sho-Ban brings the momentum of that surprise to Richfield where the Tigers are running 2-2 right now. In the lone night eight-man game, Dietrich and Shoshone hook up in one of those "hate" things caused by proximity and familiarity. Shoshone comes in at 3-2 while Dietrich is 1-4.

Milwaukee dumps Manager Trebelhorn

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Tom Trebelhorn's five-year plan for bringing the Milwaukee Brewers a pennant fell short.

And not even a 40-19 record over the final two months of the 1991 season could save his job.

Trebelhorn was fired Wednesday as the Brewers continued major changes in their operation that began a day earlier when Sal Bando replaced Harry Dalton as general manager.

"They are making changes and they think it's time to make a change in this position, too," Trebelhorn said. "They want continuity all the way through.

"My five-year plan didn't get us to where we wanted to go. To me that's more realistic than just saying we're just making a change."

As he sat at his desk for maybe the final time and prepared to clean it out, Trebelhorn joked at times, as has been his nature since he was named manager for the final nine games of the 1986 season.

He won and managed more games in team history with a 422-397 record that included three winning seasons, one loser and one at .500.

His first reaction to being fired?

"They're making a mistake," he said. "But who wouldn't say that in my role? I really enjoyed being here. We did some great things probably the greatest thing we did was the last two months. No one did better than we did. Unfortunately that's not translatable into anything other than 'Nice finish.'"

Seventeen games under on Aug. 4, the Brewers finished 83-79.

Gene Tenace, Bando's former roomate with the Oakland A's during their run of three straight World Series titles from 1972-74, is being mentioned as a possible replacement. Tenace, a coach with the Toronto Blue Jays, managed them for 19 games this season while Cito Gaston was experiencing back problems.

Bando told the Milwaukee Journal he fired Trebelhorn because he thought the Brewers needed a tougher presence. Critics say Trebelhorn wasn't tough enough over the last three seasons when he's had to deal with outspoken players like third baseman Gary Sheffield and pitcher Chris Bosio.

"I felt it was time to get some new leadership and a little different personality to get us to the next level."

"I have nothing against Treb. He's analytical and flexible with the guys. His personality was right for the club two or three years ago but in the past couple of years he's had problems with personalities. He needed to address the problems with more of a firm nature."

Catcher B.J. Surhoff said Trebelhorn should not be blamed for the team's poor start in 1991.

"Players not doing their jobs is what prevented us from being a good team. He didn't put us 17 games under .500 Aug. 4, the players did," Surhoff said. "He treated people like men and he gave them freedom and some guys took advantage of him."

Chain-reaction firings continue in Majors

NEW YORK (AP) — Merrill, Morgan and Trebelhorn.

It's not a law firm, but it might as well be. None of them have jobs as major league managers anymore, and baseball men say an insecure job might be getting even more insecure.

When the Milwaukee Brewers booted Tom Trebelhorn on Wednesday, he was the third manager fired in three days and the 11th since April 23.

"Obviously, change is part of the game," Los Angeles Dodgers executive vice president Fred Claire said.

But so much change? Last season, there wasn't a single manager fired in the immediate postseason. Now, not only managers are falling, but vice presidents and general managers are hitting the road, too.

"It all comes down to impatience," San Diego Padres executive vice president Joe McIlvaine said. "You want to win, and people look for reasons why you didn't. It usually falls on the manager, but not always."

The most recent spate of firings started Monday, the day after the season ended, when the New York Yankees stamped Stump Merrill "Par Avion" and sent him on his way. Merrill said the Yankees' 71-91 finish wasn't all his fault. "It's unfair that the manager gets the brunt of the blame, but that's just the nature of the game," Merrill said. "... With the talent we had and the problems we had with injuries to the veterans ... the club did well to finish where they did.

"If they think a manager change will make a difference, more power to them."

The next day, the Boston Red Sox fired the popular Joe Morgan, who led the club to division titles in 1988 and '90.

He had them in contention again this year before they finished tied with Detroit for second in the AL East with an 84-78 record. The Red Sox replaced him with Butch Hobson.

Then on Wednesday came Trebelhorn, who led the Brewers to an 83-79 record. At Milwaukee, the house got a good cleaning. Longtime general manager Harry Dalton was bumped out of office the day before.

"You've always had managerial changes," Claire said, "but now, there's more movement in baseball overall because of free agency. There are great investments being made in players, in salaries, in the hopes of winning, and when you have expectations and large investments, you also have high risks.

"When teams don't succeed, they're always subject to change. I think that part of it is greater than ever before. Never before have the investments in the teams themselves been so high."

The number of fired managers is expected climb. Both Chicago managers, Jim Essian of the Cubs and Jeff Torborg of the White Sox, are rumored to be leaving soon, as is Jim Lefebvre of Seattle, although he led the Mariners to their first winning season ever.

"Nothing is going to take away from what we achieved this year," Lefebvre said. "This is a milestone for us. It's a major step forward."

Six major league managers were fired even before the All-Star break, starting with Nick Leyva of Philadelphia on April 23. The Chicago Cubs' firing of Don Zimmer on May 21 started a string of three firings in three days, followed by John Wathan of Kansas City and Frank Robinson of Baltimore. Buck Rodgers was fired by Montreal on June 3, and Cleveland fired John McNamara three days before the All-Star game, on June 6.

Sweden's ban on pro boxing likely to remain

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) - In California, Fernie Morales was in a coma four days after being knocked down twice.

In England, Michael Watson still is unconscious after a brain injury in a world title fight. In Nigeria, Nojim Gbadegesin died of brain injuries after only his second professional bout.

With these incidents all having happened in the past three weeks, it seemed hardly the time to call for an end to Sweden's 22-year pro boxing ban.

But that's exactly what the head coach of the Swedish amateur boxing team did. "I think it's time to permit pro boxing in Sweden again," Leif Carlsson said.

However, it is not likely to happen.

Carlsson did think the other incidents should affect his case. "I'm sure that the control of pro boxing in Sweden would be much better," Carlsson said. "I don't think the Watson incident would have happened here. I would never have let him go out for the last round if I had been Watson's second."

Sweden banned pro boxing in 1970, almost 11 years after Ingemar Johansson became the world heavyweight champion by knocking out Floyd Patterson. The last pro event was held Dec. 30, 1969.

The ban was controversial, but it didn't, prevent the best Swedish fighters from turning pro. Since parliament passed the law, almost a dozen Swedes have fought abroad.

Permitting pro boxing in Sweden again would increase the safety of Swedish fighters, Carlsson said.

BSU Foundation discloses finances

BOISE (AP) — Good athletic coaches and administrators are valuable commodities and keeping them can be the difference between success and failure, the Boise State University Foundation says.

"...people and activities have certain marketable characteristics which can be measured in hard dollars and the failure to recognize this factor is often the difference between success and failure," the foundation said.

The BSU Foundation took a full-page ad in the Idaho Statesman on Wednesday to outline its origin, goals and justify its agreements with Boise State coaches and administrators. Those dealings, and lack of public disclosure of them, were cited by the state Board of Education when it fired John Keiser as Boise State president on Sept. 20.

Highlights:

• The foundation set up a supplemental retirement plan for Bobby Dye, in his ninth year as basketball coach, which included $21,000 per year for 10 years and which was to pay him for 15 years after retirement. But it was discovered that created a tax liability for Dye, which he wasn't able to pay, so the foundation gave him $155,160 and a later payment of $73,793 for a total of $228,953.

• A similar fund was set up for Skip Hall, head football coach, calling for payments of $10,000 per year into a fund that Hall can use upon retirement only if he remains head football coach for at least 10 years. Hall is in his fifth season. It did not create any tax liability.

• An agreement with Athletic Director Gene Bleymaier provided for $7,000 per year to be paid into a supplemental retirement fund over a 10-year period. But it was discovered that would give Bleymaier tax liabilities similar to those of Dye. The foundation said it decided to make the annual payments directly to Bleymaier and let him pay tax on it and invest the money himself.

"No Foundation funds were used for these plans or for any of the payments made to the BSU athletic staff; rather, those monies came from the contributions of those who support the athletic program," the ad said.

In support of its commitments to keep Dye as coach, the ad noted that Boise State had only two winning basketball seasons in the 13 years before he arrived. Since Dye started, BSU is 142-89 in basketball, and has won 68 percent of its games the last five seasons.

Basketball revenue was $206,000 the season before Dye arrived and is expected to be more than $800,000 this year, the ad said.

When it fired Keiser after more than 13 years as BSU president, the Board of Education said among other things that Keiser did not disclose his financial dealings with the foundation. Keiser disputes that anything was kept secret.

The board has adopted new rules requiring the Idaho schools to detail any operating agreements they have with private foundations. It stipulates that foundations must permit the schools and the Board of Education to inspect and audit their books "at reasonable times."

Foundation President Charles Blanton said the information is not secret.

"It is just information we are releasing to the public. It's information that has always been available," Blanton said.

However, the Idaho Statesman said its request for some of the numbers and the foundation's federal tax reports were denied two weeks ago.

The ad was signed by Boise State University, the foundation, the Bronco Athletic Association and the BSU Athletic Department.

Details released by the foundation differed from a statement from Keiser at a news conference a few days after his firing. He said the $7,000 given to Bleymaier was a one-time payment, but the foundation's statement said the $7,000 payments were to be made annually.

The foundation said it started making discretionary payments to Keiser in 1978 of $3,000, along with membership in a private club. "Such stipend and membership enables the president to host some activities in the interest of the university that he might otherwise not be able to do," the ad said.

The payments have increased over the years, with the payment for the current fiscal year $17,000.

"This is rather modest when compared to what is paid to President Elisabeth Zinser by the U of I Foundation," the ad said. It said news accounts indicate she is paid $50,000 from the foundation, $15,000 classified as salary and another $35,000 for discretionary use.

Penn State, Miami meet in crucial match

The Associated Press

The last time Penn State played Miami, it was for the national championship in the 1987 Fiesta Bowl. Saturday's rematch at the Orange Bowl won't determine who's No. 1, but it will have a major impact on the title picture.

Miami is 4-0 and ranked No. 2, while Penn State is 5-1 and No. 9.

If the Hurricanes win, they should remain undefeated until their Nov. 16 showdown with top-ranked Florida State. A loss won't eliminate the Hurricanes from the championship chase, but it would make them a longshot to win their fourth title since 1983.

If Penn State loses, it would probably ruin any title hopes for the Nittany Lions. No team has ever won the national championship with two losses, and there's no reason to believe the trend won't continue this season.

The last two Penn State-Miami games have featured an upset of the nation's No. 1 team.

In the 1987 Fiesta Bowl, No. 2 Penn State intercepted Heisman Trophy winner Vinny Testaverde five times and beat No. 1 Miami 14-10. In 1981, Jim Kelly led unranked Miami to a 17-14 victory over No. 1 Penn State.

Miami enters this year's game as a 10-point favorite.

The Hurricanes have routed their first four opponents, while the Nittany Lions have struggled since beating Cincinnati 31-0 in their second game. In the last four weeks, Penn State has lost to Southern Cal, defeated BYU and played poorly in victories over Boston College and Temple.

One of Penn State's problems is penalties. The Lions have been penalized 50 times for 430 yards in six games, close to their total for all last season. "We're shooting ourselves in the foot every week," said Penn State linebacker Mark D'Onofrio. "We practice well, but we seem to be putting too much pressure on ourselves."

Miami has yet to be tested. The Hurricanes are averaging 36 points and 510 yards per game, while holding the opposition to 6.5 points and 281 yards.

Miami also has won 40 straight games at the Orange Bowl, the second-longest home winning streak in NCAA history. Penn State will be victim No. 41. ... MIAMI 31-14.

Fresno sends calling card to future mates

The Associated Press

Western Athletic Conference coaches reacted with shock and disbelief when they first learned the score of New Mexico's game with Fresno State last week. Some thought it must have been a typographical error.

Fresno State, which will join the WAC next season, walloped the Lobos 94-17 Saturday night. "I don't know if we could score 94 points if there was nobody else on the field," Air Force's Fisher DeBerry said.

"When you see a score like that, you'd hate to be on either side," said Ron McBride of Utah. "That's awfully tough for a program to absorb."

"I don't know the details, but in a game like that it's invariably a case of one team doing everything right and the other team doing everything wrong," said Wyoming's Joe Tiller. "I'd be very surprised if there weren't a lot of turnovers on New Mexico's part."

The Lobos did, indeed, suffer eight turnovers. Seven UNM turnovers led to six Fresno scores as the Bulldogs raced to a 66-7 halftime lead.

Did Fresno run it up? With seven seconds left in the half and the score 59-7, coach Jim Sweeney called time-out to set up still another TD. But in their defense, Fresno did not throw a pass in the second half, and Sweeney played his third-team quarterback much of the game and used 13 ball-carriers.

"A lot of what (Sweeney) did, I wouldn't have done," New Mexico coach Mike Sheppard said.

"But that's him. The score was more our fault than his. It was the first time I can honestly say we quit."

Sweeney, who called New Mexico's program pathetic after his team beat the Lobos 68-21 in 1988, insisted after the latest debacle that he had nothing to prove to the WAC. "(WAC coaches) are my best friends, and I'm looking forward to competing there."

If nothing else, the 94-point explosion showed how competitive Fresno State figures to be once it joins the conference.

So, after circling the Oct. 24 date on next year's calendar — which is when New Mexico will face Fresno again — the Lobos will try to regroup this week in preparation for another prolific opponent, San Diego State.

SDSU's offensive feat last week was nearly as impressive as Fresno's. After making the tiring flight to Honolulu, the Aztecs exploded to a 47-0 lead over Hawaii after three quarters en route to a 47-21 victory.

"That's the closest we, as a whole — on offense, defense and the kicking game — have played next to perfect," SDSU coach Al Luginbill said. "I've said all along if we do that, someone is going to pay. It just happened to be Hawaii."

In other conference play this weekend, Utah travels to Wyoming, and Texas-El Paso plays at Brigham Young. Air Force is at service-academy rival Navy.

Colorado State and Hawaii are idle.

New Mexico, which has suffered 24 turnovers to date, ranks 106th — last in the nation — in turnover margin.

The Lobos also are 105th in scoring defense, yielding 42.8 points per game, and 104th in total defense, allowing 509.2 yards.

That beleaguered defense will try to contain Marshall Faulk, who rushed for 212 yards and five TDs last week. With more than half the season remaining (seven games), Faulk has already run for 830 yards — a per-game average of 166.

The Lobos (1-5 overall, 0-2 in the WAC) will be trying to snap two long road losing streaks. They've lost 17 in a row on the road, and have dropped 23 straight WAC road games.

SDSU (3-2, 1-1) went with sophomore David Lowery at quarterback last week, and Lowery passed for 273 yards.

Utah (3-2, 0-1) continues to lead the WAC in total defense, surrendering only 271.8 yards per game.

Wyoming (2-3-1, 0-2-1) has beaten Utah the last five meetings, but the Cowboys are winless in their last six WAC games. Injuries continue to decimate the Cowboy lineup. Linebacker Cory Talich and defensive tackle Dorell Drake are the latest casualties.

BYU (2-3, 1-0), embarking on the third game of its four-game homestand, has allowed only one touchdown in each of its last two games. The Cougars also have regenerated a running game, compiling 430 yards the last two weeks after gaining just 90 in the first three.

AFA (5-1) comes off a 651-yard performance against Wyoming that included 488 yards rushing.

NCAA lowers ACT minimum score

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The NCAA Council on Wednesday lowered the minimum score requirement on the ACT test for freshman eligibility from 18 to 17.

The new requirement is not retroactive and will begin with the 1992-93 class.

"This is based on information provided from the American College Testing Service, which according to the ACT is consistent with the concordant SAT score of 700," said Judy Sweet, NCAA president.

"I want to emphasize that this in no way is a weakening of academic standards," she said. "Rather, this is an adjustment. When they changed the revised ACT test they had anticipated, 18 would be the concordant score (with the 700 SAT).

The minimum grade point requirements for the freshman eligibility rule known as Proposition 48 remain the same, as does the minimum score of 700 on the SAT, the second college entrance exam given high school students. "All it is is an attempt to coordinate the two tests," NCAA executive director Dick Schultz said at a news conference following a two-day meeting of the Council. "And that varies from one part of the country to another.

"In the East, the SAT was about the only one students take. In the Midwest, it's the ACT," he said. "But we don't get involved in that. We leave that up to the testing associations."

The council, the policy-making group of the NCAA, also gave official endorsement to several academic proposals put forward for next January's NCAA convention by the NCAA Presidents Commission.

Sweet and Schultz also said the council joined the commission, a body of college presidents, in opposing a number of 1991 convention proposals that would adjust or undo reform measures adopted in 1990.

NBA's top picks in no hurry to sign contracts

The Associated Press

The signing of the NBA's top three draft picks won't be as easy as 1-2-3 even though No. 4 pick Dikembe Mutombo has signed with the Denver Nuggets.

Just ask the agents.

Team presidents and player agents broke out their calculators again after the 7-foot-2 center out of Georgetown signed a contract Tuesday reportedly worth $12 million over five years.

All 27 teams have started training camp, but 13 first-round picks are still unsigned by their NBA teams, including the first three, Charlotte's Larry Johnson, Kenny Anderson of New Jersey and Billy Owens of Sacramento.

Steve Endicott, Johnson's agent, disputed the $12 million figure and said Wednesday in a telephone interview from Dallas that Mutombo actually signed for $13.7 million over five years. The Hornets have offered Johnson more than $3 million a year, or $15.2 million, over five years, according to team president Spencer Stolpen.

Stolpen said the signing of Mutombo would quicken negotiations with Johnson.

"It's right in line with what we're talking about," he said. "It was appropriate, reflecting where he was drafted and where he was. ... It's certainly in line with the numbers we have been offering Larry Johnson."

Stolpen said Mutombo's signing will cause bigger problems for picks 2 and 3 because the Hornets' offer has always been larger than what Mutombo received. "I think 2 and 3 will be much more difficult. I hope you will see 1 go next," he said.

Endicott is seeking a contract for Johnson that is significantly larger than the 5-year, $15 million deal signed by last year's top pick, Derrick Coleman of the New Jersey Nets.

"I don't understand why he would say that (about the top pick signing first)," Endicott said. "They are offering basically what Coleman's deal was.

"Their salary cap number has been the problem," Endicott said. "They didn't do anything before this to make sure they could sign the No. 1 pick."

The Hornets acknowledge they have more than $1.8 million to work with under their 1991-92 salary cap of $12.5 million.

"The facts are very simple," Stolpen said. "They (Johnson's camp) have to work with the realities. I think their big hangup is that the cap has provided rookies disproportionate increases each year and that has not happened this year. I guess they're not accepting that."

Endicott said Johnson has been working out twice a day, running in the morning and shooting at night.

"I met again with Larry last night for three hours," Endicott said. "He has no desire to play this year for $1.9 million.

"... He's becoming very frustrated, Larry is just a kind of guy when the time comes he thought they would pay what's fair. He's had a heck of a lesson the last two months.

"He knows what Coleman made and what they (the Hornets) have done for J.R. Reid, Kendall Gill and Rex Chapman. He knows all the numbers."

Stolpen is optimistic Johnson will come to Charlotte soon for a contract meeting.

"Larry Johnson probably has to come to town, look at the situation and sign a contract and start playing ball," Stolpen said. "I think it's as frustrating to him as it is to the fans of Charlotte."

Endicott has said Johnson would not report to camp unsigned.

"They feel they may lose leverage once he gets here, which makes no sense," Stolpen said. "We're hiring Johnson, not his agent and we're offering him an outstanding contract."

The agent for Owens said Wednesday that negotiations between the No. 3 pick and the Kings are far apart.

60's the norm in Vegas play

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Tom Sleckmann was playing a mind game with himself over the last three holes at the Las Vegas Country Club.

"I'm thinking birdie-eagle-birdie'," he said, a finish that would have matched the lowest 18-hole score in PGA Tour history.

But Sleckman fell four strokes short with a par-par-par finish that produced a bogey-free, 9-under-par 63, and the first-round lead Wednesday in the 5-day, 90-hole Las Vegas Invitational.

He said he recognized it was unlikely he could match Al Geiberger's record 59 set in 1977, but added: "You have to play mind games with yourself. When you get six or seven or eight under par, there's a tendency to try to protect it. But in this tournament you know you can't do that. You have to keep it going."

As usual, the $1.5 million event played on three desert resort courses produced exceptionally low scoring, with more than half the pro field shooting in the 60's.

But the bulk of the scoring heroics came on the Las Vegas Country Club course, rather than the mildly controversial little Sunrise Golf Club course that is being used in the three-course rotation on a once-only basis.

Tom Byrum, the second pro off the first tee on the relatively docile little course that is listed at 6,914 yards but plays shorter, hinted at a reason after his 64. "By the time we made the turn, the greens already were spiking up pretty bad," Byrum said. "By the afternoon, and then the next two days, they're going to be pretty rough."

Byrum shared second at eight under par with retread veteran Bruce Fleisher and Kirk Triplett, both of whom played at the Las Vegas Country Club.

American Ryder Cup player Chip Beck led a group at 65 that included Ted Schulz, Brian Tennyson, Andy Bean, Bob Estes and Steve Jones. Beck, Schulz, Estes and Jones all played at Las Vegas. Tennyson and Bean were at Sunrise.

Offensive-minded Oilers show their defensive prowess as well

HOUSTON (AP) — Mention the Houston Oilers and an image forms of Warren Moon running and shooting passes to his legion of receivers.

There's more to the Oilers than just offense, though.

Like defense.

"We've gotten much better," defensive end Ray Childress said. "On a scale of one to 10, we were a five last year. We're a 7½ now. We've got everybody out there on the team trying to make a big play."

And special teams.

In Sunday's 42-14 rout of the Denver Broncos, Oilers special teams produced four turnovers that led to Houston's first 28 points.

The defense is led by combative cornerback Cris Dishman, who returned a fumble 19 yards for a touchdown and set up another score with a 43-yard interception return against the Broncos.

The offense is still among the league's best — first in the AFC with 31.2 points per game and second to Buffalo in total offense. Now the defense is moving up in the rankings, too. It rates eighth in the AFC in total defense and end William Fuller leads the conference with six sacks.

Dishman, a leading offender in the Oilers' former penalty-riddled defense, is trying to tone down his act. He now talks about team goals instead of personal ones.

"There's no room for individuals on this team," Dishman said. "It's got to be a team first. As far as me changing as an individual I'm still the same, I'm just a little bit older, I'm not looking for anything personal, not even setting goals for myself. It's just make the plays and see what happens."

But Denver wide receiver Mark Jackson says Dishman still talks trash on the field.

"Dishman got a couple of touchdowns and I didn't like that. He was talking trash all day," Jackson said. "He had diarrhea of the mouth. It was disgusting. We used to call him Dishrag and he still is."

Coach Jack Pardee, though, says Dishman has changed for the better.

"I can't change Cris, he changed himself — thank goodness," Pardee said.

"He is determined to be a good player and he's playing with a lot of intelligence. He's seeing a lot of plays and being in the right place to make the big plays."

Fuller has emerged as the Oilers' sack leader on a team that includes Sean Jones and injured Lee Williams. Jones had 12½ sacks last season.

Pardee was impressed with Fuller's performance against the Broncos.

"He was still hustling at the end, still working hard, that's how you get the sacks," Pardee said.

"He played hard for us last year but he's just taking advantage of opportunities when they present themselves now."

The Oilers held Gaston Green, who entered the game as the AFC's top rusher, to 36 yards on 15 carries. Childress and Doug Smith clogged up the middle all day.

"Ray and Doug didn't have many big plays but they bottled up the inside and kept him from getting anything started," Pardee said.

Daly finds fame following PGA win, but little success on the tour

LAS VEGAS (AP) — John Daly's long-hitting game hasn't changed since he came out of nowhere to win the PGA in August. Becoming a sudden celebrity, though, has changed Daly's life.

Golf's longest hitter drew the biggest galleries once again Wednesday at the Las Vegas Invitational, an event he had planned to celebrate by getting married to Bettye Fulford.

But she will have to wait for the spotlight on Daly to subside somewhat before getting her chance to walk down the aisle with the 25-year-old tour player.

The couple-to-be postponed their Las Vegas wedding plans because of the demands on Daly's time and his new-found celebrity status.

"The attention being paid to it just got out of hand," Daly said. "We wanted it private, but it wasn't going to be private. So we decided to wait."

Daly obligingly autographed golf balls for spectators Wednesday during his round at Sunrise Golf Club, then said all the right things during an interview for the ESPN broadcast of the tournament.

He then rushed to his car to go do a charity engagement, refusing a request by a tournament official to answer questions from reporters on a video linkup to the tournament press room at another course.

Three writers who waited for Daly to sign his card and conclude his television interview were a bit more lucky, with Daly allowing them to trail along and ask a few questions as he hurried to his car.

"I'm just the same guy," the former University of Arkansas golfer insisted. "I just go out and play golf. Whatever happens, happens."

Daly opened the 90-hole tournament with a 6-under-par 66, putting him in good position for a tournament crucial to his chances of getting into the Tour Championship, a new $2 million season-ending event.

The top 30 money-winners make the field, and Daly is currently 29th with $413,126.

"Right now I'm in it and this is a big week here," he said. "I'm happy with what I shot, but I didn't hit the ball good."

EL SEGUNDO, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Raiders don't know about Bo.

"I haven't heard from him," Raiders coach Art Shell said Wednesday. "I know the rumors are flying around. I haven't heard anything official from him or his people.

"As far as I'm concerned, he's coming in next week."

On Tuesday, CBS reported that "medical authorities" in Los Angeles are about to recommend to Bo Jackson that he retire from football because of his hip injury. Jackson's agent, Richard Woods, called the report "a total lie."

Jackson, who played the last month of the baseball season with the Chicago White Sox, usually reports to the Raiders within 10 days after the baseball season ends. The regular season ended Oct. 6. "Nothing has been decided," Woods said. "Bo's due to report next week."

Raiders executive assistant Al LoCasale said Wednesday the team has no announcement to make concerning Jackson's status.

Jackson, in the final year of a five-year, $7.4 million football contract, led the Raiders in rushing last season with 698 yards on 125 carries despite playing in 10 of 16 regular-season games. He is expected to report to meet some lucrative contract requirements. If he fails a physical, he will earn an estimated $4 million on a disability policy.

The running back injured his right hip in an NFL playoff game against Cincinnati last Jan. 13 when he was tackled after a 34-yard run. He was released by the Kansas City Royals in spring training and signed with the White Sox in April. At Chicago, he hit .225 with three homers and 14 RBIs in 71 at-bats.

"If it were up to me, then I'd play football," Jackson said two weeks ago, "but I won't do anything until I talk with my doctors."

While the Raiders aren't saying much, White Sox physician James Boscardin doubts Jackson will play for football this year.

"At this point in his recovery, I think he probably is not going to be able to play football," Boscardin said. "but that's not our decision."

No word on settling NFL suit

NEW YORK (AP) — NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue met Wednesday with lawyers representing players suing the league for free agency in hopes of reaching a settlement that could lead to the first labor agreement since the 1987 strike.

It was the latest in a series of meetings Tagliabue has held with representatives of the players over the last year, the most recent in August. James Quinn, the lawyer representing the players, reportedly has been helping them in negotiations.

But Joe Browne, the NFL's vice president for communications, said he doesn't expect any immediate settlement, which could provide the league with the labor contract it's been lacking since the 24-day players' strike ended four years ago.

"The only way the lawsuits can be settled is if there are meetings," Browne said. "The meetings are confidential and we would hope they would remain so."

The antitrust suits, filed by players who would have become free agents in 1990 and 1991, are pending before U.S. District Court Judge David Doty in Minneapolis. Two weeks ago, Doty ruled that players who were free agents in 1989 also could sue.

All the suits seek unlimited free agency for players, who now can move from team to team without limitation only if they are not protected under Plan B, which was instituted after the strike. If a free agent who is among the 37 protected by each team moves, the team that signs him must provide compensation to his former employer.

Under that system, only two players have changed teams in 13 years, the most recent Wilber Marshall, who signed with Washington in 1988 from Chicago.

PHOENIX (AP) — Rodeo, one of America's oldest sports, is finally entering the modern age as pinstripe suits and penny loafers invade a sport dominated by boots and chaps.

The matchup of the businessman and the cowboy has transformed rodeo in recent years. A cable television contract has brought the cowboy out of the arena and into living room.

Sponsors, seeing the opening, have poured more money into the sport, allowing the best cowboys to take home larger paychecks.

Some associated with the sport see the cowboy on the verge of joining the ranks of superstar athletes by the end of the decade.

"I see much more of a businessman's approach to it these days. And the people these days sure seem hungry for the sport," said Bruce Ford, five-time world champion bareback rider who has earned more than $1 million in his 20 year career.

"I don't buy that we are making the real big money yet," Ford said. "But rodeos in Houston, Texas and Calgary are offering money that put us in a bracket which make people notice that we are doing more than just putting up hay."

Ford will compete in a high-stakes Rodeo Showdown in Scottsdale, Ariz. starting Thursday. The event is organized a novel way: instead of competing as individuals, the cowboys are on teams.

It pits the top five cowboys from the United States against the top five from Canada, the other premier rodeo country.

"I think that's our future," Ford said. "We got to be just like golf. We have to have one type of tour and then we have to have a pro tour." The showdown will sport over $200,000 in payoffs, an indication of how big money is being injected into the sport.

Prize money for Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association events have increased from $9.9 million to $18.1 million per season in the last ten years and from $150,000 in the last 20. Since 1988, prize money has grown annually by $1 million and may reached $19 million this year, according to the PRCA. The national finals in Las Vegas, Nev., this December will sport $2.6 million in total prizes, as opposed to $150,000 in 1970.

"That's a big change," Ford said. "And then there's our (PRCA) board of directors. Once it was just a bunch of cowboys that got together and said they weren't getting enough money. Now there are business people on the board and they are trying to run rodeo like a business."

Rodeo has come a long way since Independence Day in 1869 when a cowboy was awarded a suit for a prize at the first organized rodeo. The sport was born shortly after the Civil War when cowboys would show off their skills of horsemanship to each other during breaks in the great cattle drives from Texas to markets in Kansas City.

Kimberly teen accidentally shot in stomach by friend

KIMBERLY — A 15-year-old Kimberly boy was accidentally shot in the stomach by a friend Wednesday afternoon.

Christopher Jordan and a 14-year-old friend were playing with what they thought were unloaded handguns at Jones' house in the 800 block of Center Street.

At 3:22 p.m., police were notified that Jordan had been shot by a .38-caliber revolver, Kimberly Police Chief Jim Campbell said.

Jordan was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Center where he was undergoing tests Wednesday evening. His mother, Cherrell Boss, works at the hospital. She said the bullet exited the boy's lower back.

Boss said she knew little about her son's condition, except that he was bleeding internally.

Buhl man doesn't want to be only nuclear waste protester

BUHL – Activist Bill Chisholm of Buhl hopes he won't be the only protester again when nuclear-waste shipments cross the Idaho border.

Chisholm is trying to pierce the veil of secrecy surrounding nuclear-waste shipments and discover when the next truckload of waste from the decommissioned Fort St. Vrain reactor will enter Idaho. Chisholm was the only protester Saturday when the first shipment entered the state, and he was arrested when he refused to get out of the truck's way.

He plans to contact Twin Falls-area and other potential protesters if he finds out when the next truck is headed toward Idaho.

"If these things are allowed in without some form of public protest, then it puts us in a weakened position," Chisholm said.

Public Service Co. of Colorado started shipping its spent fuel rods from its reactor last weekend after it won a court battle with Idaho.

Gov. Cecil Andrus has been fighting the federal government over nuclear waste shipments since 1988. His latest attempt failed when the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals ruled against the state.

Local resident is chosen Good Driver of the Week

TWIN FALLS – Don Shaffer of Twin Falls was named Good Driver of the Week Thursday by the city police department.

Shaffer was westbound on Addison Avenue near Eastland Drive when he was forced to brake and swerve to avoid colliding with a van that pulled in front of him, said Cpl. Dave Heidemann.

Heidemann added that Shaffer has a clean driving record for 30 years. He was given a free meal at Sodbuster Pies for winning the good driver award.

That means complaints about dog bites, loose animals and barking dogs will be handled by the Humane Society, located at 139 Sixth Ave. W.

The Twin Falls City Council voted for the change last month.

Andrus: Defense industry not capitalizing on waste

By Katherine Shaver
States News Service

WASHINGTON — America's defense industry is missing out on an "incredible" business opportunity by not scrambling to pick up the nation's nuclear garbage, Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus said here Wednesday.

There's a lot of money to be made cleaning up high-level nuclear and transuranic waste like that dumped in Idaho's deserts, Andrus told a national symposium of engineers and defense specialists.

Charging the federal government is "totally incompetent" in managing the United States' nuclear waste, Andrus delivered a hard-nosed sales pitch to the 200 members of the National Security Industrial Association.

President Bush's recent decision to drastically reduce the nation's nuclear arsenal doesn't mean the defense industry needs to lose money, Andrus said. Future profits — he estimated $100 billion — can be made by contracting with the federal Department of Energy to find ways of safely storing nuclear waste.

"What we're faced with today is a staggering stockpile of nuclear garbage and no place to put it," said Andrus, who spent four years as secretary of the interior in Jimmy Carter's cabinet. "Ladies and gentlemen, that's market potential."

Idaho, Andrus stressed, will no longer tolerate the federal government using its sparsely populated landscape as a nuclear trash heap. The Democratic governor closed the state's borders to nuclear waste shipments from out of state in 1988, but new shipments of from Colorado have begun arriving at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory after the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals refused to block them.

"The rest of the world out there says there's a state out there with just jackrabbits and not many people, but we have the Snake River," Andrus said.

Without help from the private sector, the governor said, the "negligence and incompetence of the federal government" will continue and INEL will be asked to store larger quantities of high-level commercial waste from other states.

"Idahoans have always been told that this storage is temporary," Andrus said. "All of a sudden, we're realizing 'temporary' is the half-life of the material there. Some of that stuff has a half-life of 25,000 years. That's may be temporary to some people, but not to us" in Idaho.

Idahoans say Thomas is their choice

By Katherine Shaver
States News Service

WASHINGTON — Most Idahoans who have phoned the offices of the state's two senators about Judge Clarence Thomas want the jurist confirmed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

That's the word from Republican Sens. Larry Craig and Steve Symms, both backers of Thomas. Both Symms and Craig added, however, that they favored the Senate's decision to postpone a vote on Thomas' confirmation until recent allegations of sexual harassment against the federal appeals judge can be investigated.

Symms' Boise office received 80 calls on Tuesday, with about 80 percent of the callers favoring delaying the confirmation vote. While that many calls is "way above normal" for the Boise office, a Symms spokesman said, the number of calls did not exceed the volume Symms usually gets from constituents on issues such as gun control.

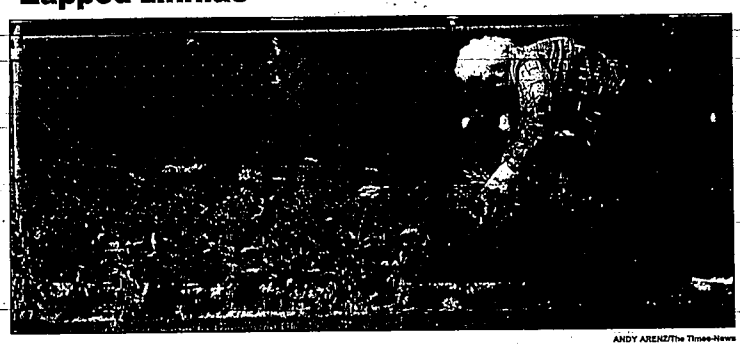
- Thomas

David Fish, a spokesman for Sen. Larry Craig, said the senator's Boise and Washington offices have gotten about 100 calls in the past two days. Of calls to the state office, slightly more than half favored Thomas' confirmation, Fish said.

"The intensity of the calls in favor of him have increased from 'I support him' to 'I'm pretty darn mad with what's going on,' " Fish said. "After the delay in the vote, the calls have increased. Folks are saying, 'What the heck is going on?' "

Thomas' confirmation is on hold pending an investigation into allegations leveled against him by Anita Hill, a University of Oklahoma law professor. Hill alleges Thomas sexually harassed her while she worked for him at the federal Department of Education and Equal Employment and Opportunity Commission in the early 1980s.

Zapped zinnias



ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

In an exercise that speaks of the changing seasons, Tillie Bates of Twin Falls plucks a row of dry zinnias from her yard on Locust Street. Along with the zinnias, the poppies and the marigolds were also cleared out for the year as Bates tidied up for the winter. Bates said she decided to do the job Wednesday before the cool fall weather sets in.

Chronic hunger haunts kids

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

BOISE – After her first husband died, Jane Romich ate scraps off her kids' plates and lost 40 pounds.

Her late husband didn't have insurance and she didn't have a job, so "you deprive yourself until you become malnourished," she said.

Romich told her story at the Poverty in Idaho Conference on Wednesday, attended by social workers and representatives of charities from throughout the state. Conference organizer Edward Musslewhite said the purposes of the gathering were to increase awareness about poverty in Idaho and to discuss possible solutions.

Child abuse, poor performance in school and crime are problems all rooted in poverty, he said.

One out of six children in Idaho suffers from chronic hunger, said Wanda Michaelson, executive director of the Idaho Hunger Action Council in Boise.

Families skip meals or eat less when money runs low, she said. Some parents will go days without food.

Romich did just that to provide for her kids, aged 2, 8 and 9.

"It didn't occur to me to feel sorry for myself," she said. "I just dealt with what I had."

Many families are ashamed to ask for help, Michaelson said.

Rather than applying for food stamps, for example, some families will go hungry, even though their children's performances at school suffer, Michaelson said.

Robin Sanchez, a counselor in the Nampa schools, said the Nampa School Board refused three times to create a school breakfast program, saying it would destroy self-sufficiency and would be mostly a convenience to parents.

But before giving a national standardized test, the district provided snacks to children, who perform better when fed, Sanchez said.

"The real irony is why we do what we do," she said. "The concern is what it will look like. More important are our values and beliefs."

Possible solutions to hunger for children include expanding the number of school districts that provide breakfast for youngsters and continuing school breakfast and lunch programs through the summer months for needy kids, Sanchez said.

Each community needs to form "speakers' bureaus" to organize discussions about poverty, she said.

Problems of poverty will persist because many jobs don't pay well enough to support families, Sanchez said.

Sharon Van Slyke of Church Women United of Wilder said people need to contact their county commissioners and legislators about poverty issues. Activism is a good word, she said.

Welders may have started Picabo fire

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

PICABO – A spectacular fire that leveled the Silver Creek Supply Co.'s grain elevator in Picabo last week may have been caused by welding equipment, the company's owner said Wednesday.

Gordon Eccles said workers had been repairing equipment atop the five-story elevator on Oct. 2. Hot welding slag could have fallen into the highly-combustible grain chaff and started the fire that erupted that night, Eccles said.

Fire investigators have given no official cause for the fire, but they have ruled out arson, Eccles said.

Despite the loss of the grain elevator and the accompanying office, Eccles said the animal feed and other products sold there have been replaced.

"We're back in business," he said.

Enough grain was left undamaged to supply the farmers who had their grain stored in bins near the elevator, Eccles said.

Insurance investigators still haven't completely assessed the damage, but losses could top $500,000, Eccles said. The damage should be completely covered by insurance, he said.

The fire, which drew some 45 firefighters from the Wood River valley, forced most of Picabo's 50 residents to spend the night in nearby Carey.

The fire also scorched a couple of grain bins and ruined much of the grain inside. One of those bins may have to be replaced, Eccles said.

Civil rights leader: Poor face prejudice

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

BOISE – Today's poor face the same barriers of prejudice that black Americans encountered in the 1960s, a pioneering civil rights activist said here Wednesday.

"Poor people – if you excuse the expression – are the new niggers of today," said James Farmer, the founder of the Congress of Racial Equality.

Farmer, considered one of the "big four" of the civil rights movement along with Martin Luther King Jr., Roy Wilkins and Whitney Young, was the keynote speaker Wednesday at the Poverty in Idaho Conference.

His last visit to Boise 20 years ago caused a furor, he recalled.

For a month before he gave a speech at Boise State University, the local daily newspaper ran editorials claiming the rabble-rouser Farmer would incite a riot, Farmer said.

Farmer

Farmer had an answer when he came.

"I told them I already spoke with Boise's negro and he assured me he would not riot," Farmer said.

But Farmer has never apologized for his activism that frequently led to his jailing during the 1960s.

It was a fight for freedom and equality and an effort to make democracy more viable, he said.

The next generation of activists must fight the evils of poverty, Farmer said.

Southern whites in the 1950s and '60s justified racial segregation in much the same way politicians and the middle class try to explain away homelessness today, he said.

"If only they had initiative and worked like me," yesterday's Southerners would say.

In the 1960s, the middle-class would say blacks like to live in shacks and sit in the back seats of buses, he said.

"See them smiling there," Farmer said. "They're laughing and listen to their songs."

"The same thing is being said of the homeless," he said.

Former President Ronald Reagan told his hosts on a trip to the Soviet Union that the homeless are homeless because they want to be, which is their right under a democracy, Farmer said. But barriers of prejudice can be broken, as demonstrated by the civil rights movement, he said.

"We learned that this nation is capable of great and swift change if the people are willing to fight for it," Farmer said. "I welcome you to the ranks of the compassionate," Farmer told about 175 social workers and representatives of local charities from across Idaho at a $15-a-plate luncheon.

Ketchum chief defends investigation

By Michael Hofferber
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – The Ketchum Police Department plans no changes in its investigation procedures, even though the Idaho Court of Appeals has overruled the conviction of a Boise man arrested in the city in 1989.

"We will continue to investigate any suspicious activity, especially when we're having a lot of crime in an area," said Ketchum Police Chief Cal Nevland.

The Court of Appeals ruled unanimously on Tuesday to reverse the conviction of Roger Fry, 26, who was arrested in Ketchum on charges of drunken driving and possession of cocaine.

The court said the officers who arrested Fry approached his vehicle because he had guns in his gun rack, and that the presence of the guns was not sufficient cause to investigate.

'We don't stop people just because they have guns in their gun racks.'

– Cal Nevland, Ketchum police chief

"We don't stop people just because they have guns in their gun racks," Nevland responded, saying he was disappointed with the court's decision.

The officer who first noticed the guns was also suspicious of the men in the vehicle parked in the Perron's supermarket parking lot just after midnight on April 22, 1989.

"As I drove through, I noticed that the occupants of the vehicle seemed to take great interest in my patrol vehicle, staring as I drove past," the officer noted in his report. From his squad car, the officer radioed two other Ketchum police officers on foot patrol and asked them to check on the vehicle during their rounds.

Those officers said they watched Fry start up the vehicle and start to back up twice before making "a jerking stop."

The officers then approached the vehicle and investigated, leading to Fry's arrest on the DUI and possession charges.

"Our position is that their conduct was suspicious enough that police had the right to investigate," said Nevland, who pointed out that downtown Ketchum was experiencing a series of burglaries at the time. The officers had been instructed to investigate suspicious behavior.

"It seemed to me like a real good piece of police work," he said.

The Court of Appeals disagreed, reversing the conviction made by 5th District Judge James May.

SNOWVILLE, Utah (AP) — Snowville City Council candidate Joseph W. Larkin spoiled his own ballot and almost lost the election, but was rescued Wednesday by a coin toss.

Larkin, who tied with Kenneth J. Webb for the last available winning spot in Tuesday's primary, would have come out ahead the first time if he hadn't accidentally voted for too many people.

10-year-old deaf girl lives life as if she hears sounds around her

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

'Her dream might change as she grows older.'

– Lorna Irwin, mother of Mavis Irwin

JEROME – The other day, young Mavis Irwin chased a man on a tractor in a nearby field with a note in her hand.

The note said: "Why do you do this?"

Mavis wrote the note because she can't speak or hear. But her disabilities don't stop the Jerome child from enjoying life nor do they put an end to her dreams.

In fact, Mavis has plenty of dreams – none of which seem impossible to a child, says her mother, Lorna Irwin.

The 10-year-old has shown she is a handy with crafts, is quick to help her father in his doctor's office, loves sports, likes bugs and never misses a chance to charm all who know her.

Right now, Mavis wants to be a teacher. Her mother says her interest in the profession was inspired by her own hearing impaired teacher at the Idaho School for the Deaf and the Blind in Gooding.

"Her dreams might change as she grows older," Irwin said. "Now Mavis feels she can teach if her favorite teacher did."

Mavis' interests don't stop there. She likes to ride on mules and collects insects as a hobby.

Her mother said Mavis is a "sports fanatic" and plays on the Jerome Recreation District soccer and volleyball teams. The most difficult task for Mavis is writing, her mother said. To write, she must understand the written English word.

But Mavis has no understanding of phonetics to determine what a word is. Mavis must memorize each word – a task more daunting since some words sound alike, Lorna Irwin said. Also, showing tenses is nearly impossible to do with sign language, she added.

Mavis does get help from other family members, though. Every one in the Irwin family can sign, including Mavis' sister, Kyle, 7, and brother Ross, who is 2.

Mavis also has been an outstanding 4-H member of the Pins and Pans Club in Jerome.

She gives public demonstrations of her 4-H projects at county and district events.

She communicates to the audience by signing her speech to an interpreter, who then speaks the words to spectators.

"She's quite a ham," says Mavis' mother.

At the district contest, held in September in Twin Falls, she demonstrated the correct way to saw a board.

Mavis' demonstrations and exhibits have won her numerous reserve championship and other awards at both county and district judging events.

A 4-H member for 2 years, Mavis has taken woodworking and ceramics under the leadership of Darlena Ohlensehlen. She built a bird nesting platform and a pair of stilts this year.

Yellowstone part of labor shortcomings

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — Federal maintenance crews in Yellowstone National Park have regularly done work that benefited lodges and a hospital clinic operated by companies without any compensation to the government, a federal report says.

Investigators from the Interior Department's Office of Inspector General found "numerous examples" at 10 national parks of maintenance work provided "for the benefit of concessionaires and other non-governmental recipients without reimbursement," the Billings Gazette reported Wednesday, quoting from the inspector general's report.

At parks the investigators visited, the National Park Service has provided a "maintenance subsidy" of about $2 million over the last three years, the report said.

In Yellowstone, such work included maintenance of the Beartooth Highway, which investigators suggested should be the responsibility of the states of Wyoming and Montana.

It also involved maintenance of the Lake medical clinic, operated by West Park Hospital in Cody, Wyo., and plowing of roads and parking lots in hotel areas "for the sole benefit of concessioners and their guests."

Overall, that work cost the federal government $416,000 that should have been recovered, the report said.

Legislation requires parks to charge companies and others for any maintenance work provided at federal expense.

In a response to the inspector general's report, however, park service Associate Director Edward Davis said some maintenance help is needed to make sure companies that provide services to park visitors in remote areas can stay in business.

According to the report, Yellowstone managers have spent at least $75,000 to maintain the medical clinic operated as a concession outlet by the Cody hospital.

Records show Craig didn't overdraw

WASHINGTON – A search of the records of the U.S. House of Representatives' bank has turned up no overdrawn checks written on the account of Sen. Larry Craig, Craig's office said Wednesday.

Jack Russ, sergeant-at-arms for the House, wrote in a letter to Craig that between July 1, 1989 and June 30, 1990, bank records indicated that Craig's checks "did not in any instance exceed your available balance of funds on deposit with this office."

Two weeks ago, the General Accounting Office reported that several House members had overdrawn checks at the House's private bank during the 1989-1990 fiscal year. The report did not mention any House members by name.

When the GAO report came out, Craig said as far as he could remember, he didn't have any overdrawn checks, "I'm glad to see my memory hasn't failed so far," he said Wednesday.

Legislator wants to see call rescinded

TWIN FALLS – In 1979, the Idaho Legislature joined dozens of other states in calling for a constitutional convention to propose a balanced-budget amendment to the U.S. Constitution. Former state Rep. Rusty Barlow thinks that call should be rescinded.

Barlow, a former three-term Republican state legislator from Pocatello, will speak Monday at 7:30 p.m. on how the call for a constitutional convention could destroy the Constitution unless it is rescinded.

Barlow will speak at the College of Southern Idaho's Shields Building. His speech, which is sponsored by Idaho's Save Our Constitution Committee, is free to the public.

North-central Idaho forests fall short

LEWISTON (AP) — Known for their considerable supply of timber, north-central Idaho national forests will offer up far less this fiscal year, according to a Forest Service report to Congress.

In a report prepared by the agency for Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., agency Chief Dale Robertson reported the Clearwater National Forest is capable of yielding 75 million board feet of timber.

That total for the Orofino-based Clearwater represents 48 percent less than the Bush administration budget estimated it could produce.

The new study predicts a similar decline for the Nez Perce National Forest based at Grangeville, saying it could yield 60 million board feet rather than the 100 million in the president's budget.

The report was requested Aug. 19 by Yates, who chairs the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee. House and Senate negotiators must still meet to negotiate a final budget for the agency.

Forest Service officials submitted the report to Yates Oct. 1, the start of the 1992 fiscal year for federal agencies.

Before the report was released, Robertson said it is similar to those prepared in the past for Congress with a major exception.

The agency has routinely provided updates by regions to lawmakers as they were setting the next year's budget. Yates, however, requested an analysis of the agency's timber targets ranger district by ranger district this year.

Agency officials said they could not meet that request but offered to compile a list of each national forest's expected timber sales level.

"This is the first time that I know of that we've been asked for the information forest by forest," Robertson said.

In the past, lawmakers have asked for similar lists of the agency's plans to build roads on national forests.

Robertson said the agency hoped the report would help Congress understand the dilemma it faces.

"It will reflect some of the realities out there as far as appeals and what we do," he said.

In his letter to Yates, Robertson said the new report still has a 10 percent margin of error.

By Michael Hofferber
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – After two special meetings last week, the Ketchum City Council decided not to overrule its planning commission on a design review appeal of the Block 56 project.

Developers of the large retail, office and cinema complex, John Scherer and Joseph Dolsot, had appealed the decision of the Ketchum Planning and Zoning Commission to the city council two weeks ago.

The commission found the project deficient on 11 evaluation standards, including landscaping, pedestrian scale, and neighborhood compatibility. The city council overruled the commission on seven standards, but upheld four others.

"The ultimate conclusion is that this project does not meet the city's design review standards," said Mayor Larry Young. He pointed out that project's need to pass all 31 standards to meet approval.

On a motion by councilwoman Sue Wolford, the council remanded the project back to the planning commission for further consideration.

The developers indicated they would submit revised plans that address the council's concerns, which included circulation design, traffic flow, parking and emergency access.

"Hopefully, this will go on to a small brief phase that will get the developers their approval," Young said.

Another controversial issue before the Ketchum council Monday night was a proposal by property owners in the Knob Hill neighborhood to install a gate across 9th Street to restrict traffic in the residential area.

Ben Howe, a Knob Hill resident, pointed out that the steep north end street is dangerous and would not be built under current design standards.

"It is, in fact, a street that should not be there," he said.

Councilman Guy Coles agreed, pointing out that it allows traffic from the city's industrial area to short-cut through the neighborhood and endanger children. In winter, the steep slope is especially treacherous.

"I know," said Coles. "Several times I slid down and entered the highway, unwillingly." Ninth St. intersects Highway 75 at the base of the hill.

Coles argued that a remote-controlled gate would keep everyday traffic from using the roadway, while still allowing emergency access. The gate would be activated by sirens on ambulances, fire trucks and city snowplows.

"I don't like trucks coming down my road either, but I think public streets should be left open to the public," said Ketchum resident Susan Grabher.

Councilwoman Wolford's motion to allow the gate was seconded by Coles, but the vote was interrupted by the observation by Ed Simon, Ketchum attorney and city council candidate, that the Knob Hill traffic problem was listed as a discussion item on the official agenda.

"If you're going to make a decision to close a public road, shouldn't there be some public notice and opportunity for public comment?" he asked.

City Attorney Ed Lawson responded that there was no legal requirement for the city to make such a notice, but he suggested that a written agreement between the city and the homeowners be drafted before a final decision is made.

Wolford amended her motion to postpone the decision until an agreement is presented to the council.

In other business, the council directed the city planning staff to prepare a proposal for a completion bond on major commerical projects.

"The citizens of Ketchum shouldn't have to look at projects that are not completed for years," argued Bob Mickelson of Mickelson Realty in Ketchum.

The council agreed to consider a proposal that would require bonding on projects that are not completed within 18 months of receiving their building permit. A public hearing will be scheduled before the council.

Seniors continue filling Buhl center

By Bertilia L. Redfern
Times-News correspondent

BUHL – Finding a place to park on Main Street in front of the Buhl Senior Citizen Center can be a little frustrating if it's around noon and on a Thursday.

The seniors seem to fill up all the parking spots in front of the downtown center as they come to share lunch with friends, visit and take part in other activities.

Meals are a big part of any senior center, and the director of Buhl's center, Dorothy Shriver, said more than 3,000 lunches are served every month.

Thursdays are one of the center's biggest day when dinner, as well as lunch, is served.

Shriver says she has been working at Buhl's Senior Citizen Center for so long she really doesn't remember how many years it's been.

But, she says more and more seniors keep coming through the doors – most of them from Buhl. A lot of it has to do with the center's services. The center sponsors field trips, card games and even has a place seniors can sell their crafts.

Shriver said every morning, as soon as the doors open at 8:00 a.m., seniors begin-to-gather-round. Fifteen-to-20 regulars show up faithfully each day and have formed a coffee club. During winni weather, the center usually loads up their bus and takes seniors on occasional picnics. They usually go once a week, and this week plan to go to Jarbidge, Nev.

The center also operates its own thrift shop and receives donated goods from the community to sell. Many seniors display their crafts they have for sale at the center. On Mondays the center sponsors pinochle, and Thursday there's bingo. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, there is quilting.

In recent years, the center is becoming more health oriented. Shriver said the center now has exercise classes every Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday mornings. Blood pressure checks are also done on the first and third Thursday of every month.

Seniors also help run the center. There are 11 people on the center's staff, but all are not full time. The center is actually run for seniors and by seniors and couldn't operate without its volunteers, according to Shriver. Seniors so far have contributed more than 1,003 volunteer hours to their center.

Workers get close look at Ada's E911

By Phil Sahm
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Emergency workers and officials from four Magic Valley counties will tour the Ada County enhanced emergency 911 center today to get ideas for their own system.

Lincoln, Gooding, Jerome and Twin Falls county representatives will tour the center to see what, if anything, in the Ada System might work for one in the Magic Valley.

Ada County's system has features that the Magic Valley would like, such as computer-aided dispatch and emergency medical-trained dispatchers, Twin Falls County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman said Wednesday.

"We'll see what we can learn from it. Anything we can think of to ask, we will," Hempleman said.

Hempleman said he particularly wants to learn about the system manager to form a job description for a similar position in the Magic Valley system.

"We need to hire a person capable of putting this together," he said.

Two proposals for an E911 system have come before the counties since voters OK'd a dollar-a-month phone charge to fund the system last November.

GTE, the national electronics and communications company, proposed building a system for $1.8 million. This plan included a $250,000 "integration fee" for GTE to set up the system, and the proposal was based on GTE supplying much of the system hardware.

The price tag resulted in sticker shock among many county officials and prompted Twin Falls Public Safety Director Paul Du Freshe to offer his own plan. Du Freshe said the counties could have E911 for about $800,000.

But emergency medical workers said the plan did not consider their needs and law enforcement officials said they did not want the center located in the Twin Falls police department.

The counties still might consider GTE's plan and officials likely will meet with the company's representatives once more, Hempleman said.

But GTE will have to lower its price and structure its proposal so that equipment can be put out to bid.

No new clues on death of wild horse

BOISE — A Bureau of Land Management investigation has turned up no evidence that a wild horse found dead in a corral near Boise was shot, spokesman Barry Rose said.

Rose said on Wednesday that the exact cause of death will be determined based on the results of additional tests. But he said there was no indication the horse was killed.

It was one of a dozen horses rounded up recently in the Owyhee desert and being kept in the corral east of Boise, Rose said. When it died Tuesday night, one of the volunteer horse fans taking care of the animals reported it had been shot, he said.

Couple settle suit by restoring lake bed

BOISE — A Hayden Lake couple agreed to restore the lake bed on a portion of their property to settle a lawsuit brought by the state.

In a settlement approved Tuesday by the state Land Board, Stephen and Judith Meyer agreed to remove some of a section of rip-rap from their lakeshore property and dredge pea gravel from the lake bed.

The Idaho Department of Lands in March 1990 filed a lawsuit against the Meyers, alleging they had violated the Lake Protection Act and trespassed on state land by improving their bank below the ordinary high-water mark.

Year-long school may end class crunch

IDAHO FALLS — The city is growing so rapidly that the superintendent of the Idaho Falls School District is looking at the possibility of year-round school to head-off classroom crowding.

Jerry Jacobson said principals, teachers and parents will tour some Utah schools that hold classes throughout the year later this fall.

"It appears that growth is heavy to the extent we better be looking at options," he said.

If enrollment keeps increasing at its current pace, all classrooms in the district will be filled to capacity by the fall of 1993.

Enrollment in Idaho Falls schools grew about 1,000 students in the past two years, nearly filling three new schools and two classroom additions that opened this year. Only eight elementary school classrooms and 14 portable classrooms are vacant, Jacobson said.

Ken Wyler, president of the Idaho Falls Education Association, declined to criticize consideration of year-round school as a way to free space, but he said the educational interests of students cannot be overlooked.

Port asks state to purchase 104 rail cars

LEWISTON — The Port of Lewiston is asking the state to purchase 104 rail cars to help transport grain and other farm products if the port is closed by a drawdown of reservoirs on the lower Snake River.

Port manager Ron McMurray said Tuesday he met with state officials last week to propose Idaho buy $6 million in railroad cars for the port.

The money would be used to purchase four unit trains, or 104 rail cars. River barges could be dry-docked if Snake River reservoirs are dropped to accommodate dwindling salmon runs.

Idaho Power won't back 1% initiative

BOISE — Idaho Power Co. says although it would get a $2 million annual cut in property taxes under the One Percent Initiative, it won't back the initiative because of the disruption it could cause in public programs.

"We believe any sweeping tax proposal that fails to address how programs and services the public genuinely needs are to be funded is irresponsible at heart," Larry Taylor said. He is manager of legislative affairs for the state's largest utility.

The company said in a weekly newsletter it views the initiative as an indiscriminate attempt to eliminate waste in government that inevitably would hurt necessary and well-managed public programs.

Scouts receive thanks but little else

BOISE — Post Falls Explorer Scouts who recovered about $10,000 in supposed drug money for narcotics officers will get the state's gratitude but little else, Idaho Law Enforcement Director Dick Cade says.

Cade Tuesday said Idaho law prevented the Bureau of Narcotics from using money forfeited in drug cases for anything else but drug enforcement. The decision was made on advice from the department's attorney.

One Explorer official, however, has doubts whether it was drug money.

DOE agrees to delay nuclear waste shipments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal government agreed on Wednesday to a 30-day delay for shipping nuclear waste to an underground storage facility near Carlsbad, N.M.

"That's very good news. It means the trucks don't roll tomorrow," said New Mexico Deputy Attorney General Manuel Tijerina, who had sought a federal court order to bar the shipment.

The state of New Mexico, in court papers, said the federal plan to ship federal weapons production waste temporarily stored in Idaho to the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant "will inflict irreversible damage upon the state."

"For us this is a whole issue of health and safety," Tijerina said after the court hearing.

Officials at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory said a truckload of the waste was ready to be picked up anytime by WIPP drivers.

The Energy Department took over the WIPP site last Thursday from the Interior Department after negotiations with Congress broke down. The government had said the shipments could begin as early as Thursday.

Attorney Caroline M. Zander, representing the federal government, told U.S. District Judge John Garrett Penn that federal officials would delay any shipment until Nov. 8 to allow the court to consider the issue.

But Penn said there would not be time to prepare and read the necessary documents by then, and he scheduled a hearing for Nov. 15. The judge said he would address any decision by the government to ship nuclear waste before the hearing if it occurs.

"I think we're absolutely united in the idea that an administrative withdrawal, which brings in waste at this time, is not acceptable to the state of New Mexico," New Mexico Attorney General Tom Udall said in Santa Fe, N.M., before the hearing.

"I think the federal government has gotten the message," he said.

The federal government wants to begin a seven-year test program at the storage facility excavated in underground salt beds to determine whether the site could be used for permanent storage of nuclear waste.

The department plans to ship as many as 8,500 drums of plutonium-contaminated waste to the site. State officials have sought to limit the shipments to 4,500 drums, but the Energy Department balked at the restriction.

The lawsuit contends Congress is given exclusive control over the use of federal land, and that the departments of Energy and Interior sought to improperly bypass Congress by carrying out the land transfer administratively.

The lawsuit contended that if radioactive wastes are placed at the New Mexico site, it likely will not be possible to remove them. Thus, the state said, the federal government is seeking to use the site "as a de facto permanent nuclear waste repository."

The lawsuit said WIPP "has passed none of the standards which apply to disposal of a nuclear waste repository. The underground repository is presently geologically unstable and cannot be predicted to remain intact."

"If we can convince the judge that if you put some test waste in there, and that in all likelihood the instability of the geologic structure will at some point entomb that waste regardless of what the scientists and the technicians want, that's irreparable harm," Udall said.

Udall said the state's case would have been stronger with a decision by state Environment Secretary Judith Espinosa that the Energy Department did not have the required temporary storage permit.

The state also objected to shipping the nuclear wastes along state highways, adding that hospitals were not prepared to handle the health hazards that could be caused by an accident.

Former Rocky Flats workers file harassment lawsuit

DENVER (AP) — Two former workers at Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant claim they were harassed and deliberately contaminated with radioactive wastes after talking to FBI agents about problems at the plant.

In a lawsuit filed against their former employer and co-workers on Wednesday, Jacqueline Brever and Karen Pitts said they were forced to quit last April after seven years at the plant.

The action seeks unspecified damages for "intense fear and terror or personal harm to themselves and their immediate family members, severe emotional stress and disability ... property damage to their homes and vehicles (and) physical symptoms of radiation sickness."

State police face suit over earnings, hours

The Associated Press

A lawsuit filed against the state Department of Law Enforcement claims violations of wage and working hour regulations.

The lawsuit, filed in 6th District Court at Pocatello, seeks among other things pay for the half-hour lunch breaks State Police officers take. An attorney said it could mean up to $2 million in back pay.

Monte MacConnell, deputy director for the agency, said Wednesday the department was advised the suit was to be filed, but a copy has not been served yet.

Seven troopers at Coeur d'Alene joined the suit, contending they should be compensated for their half-hour lunch breaks because they're required to be on call, frequently are interrupted and aren't allowed to go home on break without permission.

Attorney Harvey Richman, one of two attorneys representing the officers, said the state's 150 troopers could be entitled to back pay of at least $665,000 and possibly as much as $2 million.

But department administrators said Tuesday they're abiding by federal labor law. And troopers, like municipal police officers, should expect to be called upon when emergencies arise, they said.

"It's part of the territory. That's what I always thought," said Bill Overton, information officer at the Boise headquarters of the Department of Law Enforcement, which oversees the state police.

Capt. Glen Schwartz, commander of the North Idaho barracks, said he had barely ordered lunch at a restaurant Tuesday when he was called to an accident scene.

ROSLYN, Wash. (AP) — There are 25 cemeteries in this historic town, and some residents might like to start a 26th for the "Northern Exposure" television series.

A feud has erupted between some townspeople and the crew of the popular television series that is partially filmed in this picturesque former mining town of 900 residents.

Angry residents have circulated a petition demanding more control over the filming, saying it disrupts their lifestyle. Of particular concern is lack of access to downtown, and an incident in which actors ran naked through the streets.

"Their attitude is it's their movie set," complained Lea Beardsley, who collected 136 signatures presented to the City Council last week. "They are doing what they want, how they want, when they want, with no controls."

Spokespersons for Pipeline Productions declined comment on the scene Tuesday, and a company publicist in Los Angeles was unavailable for comment.

"Northern Exposure" is a fish-out-of-water story about a New York City doctor who is forced to pay back a medical school loan by practicing in a fictional Alaska town.

The series has been growing in popularity, and offers a warm and eccentric view of small-town life. Interiors are filmed in Bellevue, a Seattle suburb, while Roslyn stands in for the fictional town of Cicely in exteriors.

There is little doubt that "Northern Exposure" takes over Roslyn during the one to two days per week it films on location.

Tuesday's morning, production equipment blocked half the main street, Pennsylvania Avenue, and crew members blocked or directed traffic — all through the downtown area.

Passersby were ordered to stand perfectly still and not slam car doors while cameras were rolling a block away. Some sidewalks were blocked for filming. A reporter was ordered to cross a street to avoid being in the background of a shot.

"Once in a while you have to stop and stand here. It's no problem," said one passerby.

For all the disruption, "Northern Exposure" is pumping new life and new money into a town where the 5,000 people in the 25 distinct ethnic or religious cemeteries far outnumber the living.

Crowds of gawkers lined the streets to watch filming on Tuesday. Reporters for national publications interviewed star Janine Turner at a window table in the packed Roslyn Cafe, whose outside mural is seen on the series each week.

Many residents support the show, said Jerry Morris, the local barber who has a small recurring role as Earl the Barber.

"We've lost our mining industry and we're tending to lose our timber industry," Morris said. "We have to encourage tourism as an industry."

"We know they will not be here forever," said Morris, who wore a "Northern Exposure" fan club button. "We better make hay while the hay-ing's good."

He noted that a majority of residents did not sign the petition.

Other supporters say that while the film crew itself may not pump much money into town, the influx of tourists is increasing revenues. The City Council's latest newsletter trumpeted that local business license revenues are 228 percent higher than expected.

"New guidelines and procedures are now being hammered out between Roslyn and the production company," the newsletter said, reminding residents that politeness is a two-way street.

Mayor Jack Denning was not available for comment Tuesday, and city clerk Margaret Heide said a gag order had been imposed on other city employees regarding the show.

Ms. Beardsley said she received a long list of complaints when collecting signatures. They included disruption of sleep from late-night filming, lack of parking, residents being unable to enter the post office or bank, rudeness and repeated acts of trespassing.

One particularly upsetting incident, known as "The Naked Run," occurred last spring when more than a dozen male actors streaked naked through town in a scene that originally called for them to wear flesh-colored tights, said Ms. Beardsley, owner of a local brewery.

The actors were arrested and charged with indecent exposure, but the charges were dismissed in exchange for a donation to city parks she complained.

"We feel this is our home and we would like people to act as if they were visiting our home," said Ellie Below, a writer who signed the petition. "We want to be more than something people take a picture of and then drive away."

Petition signers are not demanding that the series leave town, Ms. Below said.

Rather, they are asking that a citizen's council be formed to work with the production company to reduce problems, she said.

7.8 earthquake could shake Pacific coast

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A little-studied fault that stretches from California's agricultural heartland to Death Valley could produce a deadly earthquake measuring 7.8 on the Richter scale, a new study shows.

The 154-mile-long Garlock Fault intersects at its southwestern end with the more famous San Andreas Fault at Tejon Pass. The pass is about 35 miles south of Bakersfield at the south end of the San Joaquin Valley, the center of California's farm industry.

If the entire fault ruptured at once, a "quite plausible" possibility, the resulting quake would measure 7.8 in magnitude, said the study by geologists Sally F. McGill of California State University, San Bernardino, and Kerry Sieh of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

"I would not be surprised if that earthquake generated some loss of life and considerable damage to structures," said McGill, whose study will be published in an upcoming issue of the Journal of Geophysical Research.

Scientists previously believed the Garlock could produce big quakes, but the study of geological traces left by prehistoric quakes reveals the expected severity of future jolts.

By showing the fault produced big quakes during the past 1,000 years, the study "puts the fault in the same category as most of the state's historically destructive faults," Sieh said.

The fault runs in three sections. Scientists don't know how soon the western and eastern segments might produce big quakes. But there is a 5 percent to 10 percent chance of a major jolt on the central segment within 30 years, McGill said.

More research is needed to determine just when the most recent major quakes were.

The Richter scale is a measure of ground motion as recorded on seismographs. Every increase of one number means a tenfold increase in magnitude. A 7 reading is a "major" earthquake, capable of widespread heavy damage; 8 is a "great" quake, capable of tremendous damage.

TACOMA (AP) — Six out of every 10 likely voters in Washington state favor an initiative that would allow doctors to help terminally ill people end their lives, a newspaper poll found.

The poll by the Morning News Tribune asked the basic question of Initiative 119: "Shall adult patients who are in medically terminal conditions be permitted to request and receive, from a physician, aid-in-dying?"

Sixty-one percent answered yes, the poll found. Twenty-seven percent said no. Twelve percent were undecided.

The poll's results were published today. The newspaper said 1,670 adults 18 or older were interviewed by phone in Washington between Sept. 24 and Oct. 4. Poll results were based only on the answers of the 536 people determined to be "likely voters" in the Nov. 5 general election, based on secretary of state voter-turnout projections and respondents' individual voting interest and history.

The margin of error for the entire poll sampling is plus or minus 4 percentage points, although it is higher for sub-categories of respondents.

Initiative 119 needs a simple majority to pass. Passage would make Washington the only place in the world where physicians can legally help terminally ill patients end their own lives.

The ratio of yes votes to no votes was consistent among men and women, through all categories of income and in all counties and geographical regions of the state.

Likely voters 65 and older were less likely to oppose the initiative than those between 18 and 54. Sixteen percent of the first group said they would oppose it, compared to 28 percent for the second group.

Man's tall tale leads to short marriage

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR DECEIVEE: It's discouraging to contemplate a world where a bride-to-be must see in black and white that her fiance is on the up and up. Not all that glitters is gold, nor is all that sparkles a genuine diamond.

DEAR ABBY: A few months back I sent for your booklet on "How to Be Popular." It did me so much good, I'm a different person. I read it several times, and then passed it on to family and friends. It may never get back to me, so will you please send me another copy – along with "How to Write Letters for All Occasions" and "How to Have a Lovely Wedding"?

I read your column every day – and it makes such good sense. God bless you.

– HELEN LEWIS, OOLOGAH, OKLA.

DEAR ABBY: Do you happen to know George Bernard Shaw's very witty definition of love?

– JAMES K. IN MIAMI

DEAR JAMES: Yes. "Love is a gross exaggeration of the difference between one person and everybody else."

"How to Be Popular" is an excellent guide to becoming a better conversationalist. To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

DEAR ABBY: You were right in your advice to "No Guts," who had given his fiancee a three-carat cubic zirconia. (You told him to find the guts because it would be better if she got the news from him.) I only wish he had written his letter a year ago. Here is the female point of view:

My fiance gave me a two-carat "diamond," saying he had inherited it from his grandfather. He said the jeweler that mounted it had told him its value was "between $8,000 and $10,000 dollars." When I asked if he'd ever had it appraised or insured, he said he hadn't – because he didn't want to pay an inheritance tax. His mother didn't even know he had it, he said, and I could never tell her because it would cause a family feud!

Of course, being in love and blinded by this gorgeous "rock," I fell for the whole story, and proudly showed it off at work and to friends and family. Imagine my embarrassment (yes, after the wedding!) when I took it to a jeweler to have it appraised, and he told me it was not a diamond!

When I confronted my husband, he gave me another string of lies, saying that either one of his previous roommates had found the ring in the apartment and replaced the stone with a fake, or that when he took it to the jeweler for engraving, the jeweler must have switched the stones. Then he said that he knew when he said "I do" that it wasn't a diamond, but planned to replace it (without my knowledge) on our first anniversary.

Needless to say, eight months before our first anniversary, I divorced this con artist. I learned my lesson the hard way – and my sympathies go out to his next victim. "No Guts" should heed your sound advice, Abby, but I would also advise women to be wary of and question any diamond that is over one-half carat if it has no papers.

Coalition celebrates Child Health Day

The Coalition has organized 25 booths where children can actively learn about injury prevention. There will be booths on bicycle safety, fire safety, poison prevention, using a fire extinguisher and personal safety. Booths will also be set up for fingerprinting, photo ID and screenings for sight, speech and hearing. Prizes will be given to the children.

The Blue Lakes merchants have donated a variety of prizes, other merchants have donated bicycle helmets and applications will be taken for 200 smoke detectors that will be given away.

In 1989, the Magic Valley had 18 deaths of children and 3,500 injuries to children, most of which were predictable and preventable, according to the Coalition.

ISU offers kids' science classes

Kerwin Hill will take fourth-through sixth-graders into the future in "T-Minus 10: A Countdown to the 21st Century."

Where science goes in the 21st Century depends on where science has been. "Come and explore rockets and space so you'll be ready" is the invitation for the class, which is set for 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Wednesdays, Oct. 16 and 23. The fee is $20.

"Volcanoes: Keep on Rocking" will be offered for second- through fourth-graders from 3:30 to 5 p.m. Tuesdays, Nov. 12 and 19. "Volcanoes are the source of earth's igneous rocks and water," said Hill, who will also teach this class. Youngsters will make a working volcano, learn chemistry and learn how volcanoes have shaped the earth and Idaho. Cost is $18.

Registration and information may be obtained from Rebecca A. Thorne-Ferrel, education coordinator for the museum, by calling 236-2195.

TAPE MEASUREMENTS

Tape measurements of young women have changed in the last 50 years. Their waist and hip measurements today are slightly smaller.

Average then, 26.6-inch waist; now, 25.8. Then, 37.5-inch hips; now, 36.9. The bust measurement average of this particular group remains unchanged at 34 inches.

Q. Has anybody ever explained those huge footprints some people think are made by Bigfoot-type mountain monsters?

A. Undisturbed footprints in cold sunny places thaw first around their edges, so enlarge evenly. That's one explanation by the debunkers.

If an animal nourishes its young with milk, it's a mammal, true. But add this: All mammals, even in the sea, have skin hair, a lot or a little. Whales, I'm told, have a few whiskers.

FORT TEJON, Calif. (AP) — Spectators cheered and truckers honked as 1,760 giant yellow umbrellas blossomed in an arid mountain pass Wednesday to complete a trans-Pacific spectacle by environmental artist Christo.

"You can't put it into words. I'm speechless," Jimmy Bentley said as he cranked opened one of the van-sized fabric parasols on a freeway overpass in Tejon Pass, 70 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

Under brilliant morning sun and blue skies, the umbrellas sprouted amid burnt-yellow chamisa and golden-brown thistle on the drought-parched hills that Christo chose as his massive canvas.

The unfurling of the Southern California umbrellas marked the second phase of a two-country exhibit, following by less than a day the opening of 1,340 blue umbrellas scattered along two lush valleys north of Tokyo. The joint display will remain up for three weeks.

Christo oversaw the Japanese umbrella opening under drizzly skies before leaving by jet to direct the American part of the $26 million event — the Bulgarian-born artist's latest effort to create the world's largest artworks. Christo is paying for the umbrella project himself from sales of umbrella-related items and other artistry.

In the past, Christo has ringed Florida islands with pink fabric, wrapped Paris' Pont Neuf bridge in cloth and rope, and erected a marathon-length cloth fence across the fields of Northern California.

AP Laserphoto

Some of Christo's yellow umbrellas fill a field near Fort Tejon, Calif., Wednesday morning. The unfurling of the umbrellas followed less than a day the opening of 1,340 blue umbrellas scattered along two lush valleys north of Tokyo.

Like his other giant projects, the California umbrellas drew expressions of wonder and puzzlement, as well as disgust.

Looking over the umbrellas, spectator Zona Myers of Palmdale said she wasn't convinced the display was art.

"I think of it as kitsch — an attempt at art, but it doesn't quite make it," she said.

Local resident Stormy Williams was even more critical.

"It would be nice if someone influential like this raised money for the homeless or cleaned up toxic sites," she said. "It's sure pretty, but sort of self-indulgent by Mr. Christo."

Expected congestion failed to materialize Wednesday, as traffic on eight-lane Interstate 5 buzzed along at maximum speeds and viewer parking was plentiful along frontage roads.

Ironically, the umbrella openings were delayed one day by hard rain in the Japanese valley of Hitachi-Ota. Christo said the umbrellas could have been opened, but the rain would have ruined the event's artistic integrity.

About 16 hours later — just after dawn Wednesday in Southern California — workers whooped for joy as the first 20-foot-tall yellow umbrella was opened on a mile-high mountain ridge overlooking the interstate.

The umbrellas were spread out across brown pasture land and gray, chaparral-covered slopes. Curious deer gathered around umbrellas on hilltops and in meadows. Horses and cows also milled around some of the parasols.

Truckers roaring along Interstate 5 — the state's main north-south artery — blasted their horns while motorists honked and gave the thumbs-up sign. One driver stopped to take a photograph, only to be ticketed by the California Highway Patrol.

Signs all along the freeway prohibit parking. The law allows for only emergency stops on the interstate, with nearby rural roads designated for viewer parking.

Popular woman in Salt Lake mayoral race

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Salt Lake's mayoral primary established Democrat Deedee Corradini as the front-runner in her bid to be the city's first woman mayor, but it will take a recount to determine her general election opponent.

In Tuesday night's balloting, Corradini took the lead early and never trailed. She ended the officially nonpartisan primary with 7,638 votes, or 29 percent.

But for Dave Jones and David Buhler, it was nip and tuck as votes were tallied for runner-up. First one, then the other took precarious leads until the race came down to the last two of 148 districts. Buhler prevailed by a scant 85 votes, or 6,762 to Jones' 6,677.

That's a margin of just two-tenths of a percentage point, or 25.2 to 25 percent.

Jones, a Democratic state representative, said Wednesday he had asked for a recount, but would be surprised if it changed the outcome.

Buhler said he, too, had asked election officials to do their best to speed any recount.

"We've only got four weeks of campaigning" until the Nov. 5 general election, he said.

In addition to possible changes from a recount, Salt Lake City recorder Kathyrn Marshall said 78 absentee ballots remained to be counted. She said the process may not be completed until Friday.

It could be next Tuesday, when the board of canvassers meets, before results are released, she said.

The primary eliminated Democrat Mike Zuhl, 39, who had the endorsement of Mayor Palmer DePaulis, whom he serves as chief of staff. DePaulis is leaving office to run for governor. Zuhl had 5,331 votes, or 20 percent of the total.

Jones, 40, said he had definite plans if he doesn't glean enough recount votes to inch past Buhler, the 34-year-old state commerce director and the lone Republican in the race.

"I'm going to read a book. I have a little grandbaby I haven't gotten to know," he said.

Corradini, a 47-year-old businesswoman, made a point of courting bipartisan support from community leaders and residents in this city of 160,000, a bastion of diversity in otherwise predominantly Mormon, Republican Utah.

Court upholds decision that kept boy out of class

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A state appeals court Wednesday refused to intervene on behalf of a 9-year-old schoolboy who was taught in an isolation room because his hair was too long.

The 3rd Court of Appeals declined to order the boy's return, but said it had made no decision on the underlying merits of the case. Zachariah Tourgate's lawsuit against the Bastrop Independent School District is still pending.

Last year, the boy was isolated from his third-grade classmates and taught in a small room at school because his wispy ponytail violated the school's hair-length policy.

The family asked State District Judge Harold Towslee to grant a temporary court order that would have prohibited the school from placing Zach in isolation.

Towslee denied the order, and the Tourgates appealed to the 3rd Court of Appeals. But the court said Wednesday it can reverse a district court's action on a temporary order only if "the court's action was so arbitrary as to exceed the bounds of reasonable discretion."

The court said Towslee relied on legal precedent established in a 1976 hair-length case, but added "we express no opinion as to whether the district court correctly applied the law."

Deer Lodge horses malnourished

ANACONDA, Mont. (AP) — More than 300 horses are starving at a ranch in the Deer Lodge Valley near Anaconda, and a ranch owner has been charged with cruelty to animals.

Anaconda-Deer Lodge Police Chief Jim Connors said ranch owner Mary Kellogg has refused to sell the horses, and "there's absolutely no pasture" at the Kellogg ranch.

She swears she's feeding them, but you don't have to know much about horses to see that they're starving," he said.

Kellogg was charged last week in Justice Court with cruelty to animals, a misdemeanor. Her ranch is in Deer Lodge and Powell counties, Connor said.

John Siders, animal-control officer for Anaconda-Deer Lodge, said he is trying to find feed and other assistance for the animals. He has spoken with several humane societies in other Montana cities and towns, and with local people willing to donate hay.

Know your bullets - it can't hurt

It is possible for a hunter to buy a box of rifle shells off the store shelf, giving little thought to the type of bullet used, and still have a relatively successful hunt.

The fact is, in a majority of shots, it may make little difference if the bullet has a flat base or is a boat tail, or if the bullet is a round nose, a spitzer or a spire point.

David Hocklander
Hunting

The modern cartridge and powder combinations can power just about any bullet to an impressive performance.

But all of this is not to say that the type of bullet used on a particular hunt has no importance. Bullet selection might make the difference between a good hit with a minimum of damaged meat and a good hit which also wastes a whole quarter.

Some understanding of the various terminology used to describe bullets and the advantage of various characteristics can be helpful in matching bullet to hunting situation to improve your odds of success.

Rifle bullets come with two base designs; flat base and boat tail. The boat tail design has an angled heel and is inherently more accurate in most rifles.

This makes the boat tail popular with match shooters and any hunter who craves that sub one inch group. The accuracy advantage, however, may be insignificant for most hunting purposes. In fact in some rifles with over sized bores, the flat base may actually perform better.

The shape of the forward part of the bullet which includes the ogive, point, and meplat falls into a few basic designs. The most common shape is the "spitzer" or "spire point" design.

The angle of the ogive is acute, the meplat is narrow and the point is sharp. The advantage of this design is long range accuracy due to high a ballistic coefficient—the index of the bullet's efficiency to overcome resistance in flight.

At one time it was believed that the pointed bullets did not expand well, but modifications in the core alloy and jacket design have enabled these pointed bullets to expand as well or better than other designs.

The "semi-point" or "semi-spitzer" style has a gentle ogive with a thicker meplat and

Count finds chinook nests at all-time low

BOISE — The Idaho Department of Fish and Game counted an all-time low number of spring chinook salmon redds (nests) in the Salmon River drainage.

Salmon Survival Watch, an occasional service of the Columbia-Snake Rivers Maintem Flow Coalition, reports only 180 redds were counted this year. The previous low was 194 in five-year average from 1981-896. From 1986 through 1990, the average had improved slightly to 422.

Forest Service seeks comment on campground improvement

KETCHUM — Two public hearings to discuss improvement of campgrounds in the Stanley Basin are planned by the Sawtooth National Forest.

The first is slated for 7:30 p.m. Oct. 22 at the Ketchum Town Square community room. It will study proposed improvements for the Redfish Lake Outlet campground.

The second is set for 7:30 p.m. Nov. 7 at the same site to consider similar improvement at Sunny Gulch campground.

Rights group aims at cranes, swans

The Associated Press

MISSOULA, Mont. — Fresh from court victories stopping the legalized hunting of grizzly bears in Montana and elk in Arizona, the national Fund for Animals may next challenge the killing of sandhill cranes and tundra swans, its national director says.

The animal-rights group, which claims a membership of 200,000 nationwide, earlier this year helped shoot down the use of hunters to kill bison moving into Montana from Yellowstone National Park.

In late September, it succeeded in stopping temporarily the killing of grizzly bears in Montana, and last Friday, it won a court ruling stopping an elk hunt in Arizona.

Wayne Pacelle said the Fund for Animals intends to stop the "most grievous" forms of hunting. "Most people are appalled that these rare and remarkable species are being shot for mere recreation," Pacelle said in an interview with The Missoulian on Monday. "Clearly, the high-profile cases in Montana played right into our hands. People were flabbergasted that America's most magnificent predator species was still being hunted for recreation — and they will be aghast to think that swans and cranes are hunted."

Montana sold 500 swan hunting permits in the Pacific Flyway this year, with hunting limited to Teton, Cascade, Toole, Liberty, Hill and Pondera counties. It offered another 500 permits in the Central Flyway east of the Continental Divide, but sold just 100.

Sandhill cranes are hunted in the Central Flyway. Permits are free and limit hunters to three cranes in a day or six in possession. The lower quarter of the flyway is closed to hunting.

Pacelle said his group will continue its scrutiny of Montana's hunting seasons, which he said "point out a pattern of mismanagement by the Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks."

He said the group also is concerned about arctic grayling, which number just 3,000 in the upper Big Hole River and 1,000 in the Madison River, and about woodland caribou and wolves.

The Associated Press

BOZEMAN, Mont. — Lawsuits by anti-hunting activists and public opinion will stop sport hunting in many states within 20 years, but it will take longer in Montana, an official with the Fund for Animals predicts.

Wayne Pacelle, national director for the fund, is touring several Montana cities this week, saying that the fund is moving public opinion against sport hunters. "The organization's muscle is growing stronger," Pacelle said.

He acknowledged that hunting is a cultural tradition in Montana, but said that doesn't justify it.

"Our goal is to get sport hunting in the same category as cock fighting and dog fighting," he said during a stop on Tuesday. "Our opponents say that hunting is an American tradition. We

Deer hunters find modest success

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME — Magic Valley hunters enjoyed about 40 percent success in the opening weekend of the deer season and along the way showed that more of them can hit the field on a Saturday than Wednesday.

The Idaho Department of Fish and Game conducted checking stations for units 54 and 55 for the controlled hunts there and also found good compliance with the two-point rule in the Sublett unit.

In unit 54 (Cassia division) of the South Hills, the department checked 515 hunters through stations in Shoshone Basin and Rock Creek.

They had 223 deer for 43 percent success. Last year's success was pegged at 40 percent.

Evidently because of the Saturday opening, pressure was up 8 percent from last year and while that might sound rather small, last year's totals were arrived at over three days — Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday — against the two days this year.

In unit 55, stations at Albion and Oakley processed 444 hunters with 174 deer and a 39 percent success. That was five percent below last year.

The number of hunters was up 17 percent — again compared to the three-day totals of last year.

The private land lockout by landowners in the east Oakley area drew some protest from hunters — but surprisingly perhaps more from sagehen hunters than big game nimrods.

Idahoans generally comprehended the two-point regulation and its meaning well, despite this being the first time in Idaho it has been used.

Craig Kvale, Region 4 wildlife manager, said the Sublett check stations handled 185 hunters with 24 deer — only 13 percent.

"Generally we found compliance with the two-point regulations very good. We did have some violations but that was with the shooting of some antlerless animals that weren't legal over the weekend," Kvale said.

"Folks were aware of it," he said of the new regulation. "I suppose we had as many favoring it as opposing it, especially after the reason for its enactment was explained to some."

The five-year management plan for mule deer supports the hunters' expressed desire for larger bucks in the population.

Because unit 56 abuts eastern Idaho's management area, it has drawn considerably more pressure than those Region 4 units farther west because it is the closest one to the Pocatello population center to have a different opening date.

The regulation, adopted after providing good service in other states, requires that only bucks with two points or less on one side may be harvested.

The law is designed to provide mature bucks for viewing and rut participation.

"Most of those interviewed at the station said they were in favor of seeing bigger bucks. Most thought it was a good dea. But some hunters were very opposed," Kvale said.

"The regulation does require extra time and effort by the hunter. It means a hunter must get pretty close to a two-point and take the extra time to make certain that one side has only two points. By that time, the deer cover a lot of ground and require some marksmanship," he said.

Kvale said the department didn't have a check station in the area last year but the impression by field officers seemed to be that pressure was down some this fall.

Kvale reminded hunters that "any deer" portions of the season in units 43, 48, 49, 52A and 46 run from Oct 9 through Oct. 13 only.

Saving salmon

Montana will pay a price to protect spawning runs

The Associated Press

KALISPELL, Mont. — One of Montana's two representatives on the Northwest Power Planning Council says northwest Montana will pay a price to preserve salmon spawning runs on the lower Columbia River.

Drawdown doubts - D2

John Brenden told a Kalispell Chamber of Commerce committee meeting Monday that efforts to preserve the salmon runs could dwarf the effect of the spotted owl decision on northwest forests.

"The spotted owl will be the gnat on the backside of an elephant compared to the salmon issue," said Brenden.

The proposed solution includes sending more water down the Columbia River system when salmon head to the sea in spring.

That will require deeper drawdowns at Hungry Horse and Libby dams in Montana to provide the water, said Brenden.

"Montana doesn't have any (sengoing) salmon. It basically has everything to lose and nothing to gain," he said.

"We lost that on a 6-2 vote," he noted.

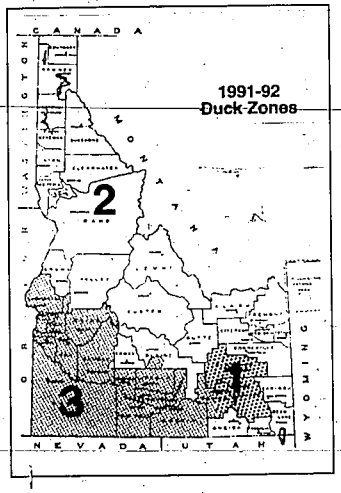
"If we're going to share the pain, everyone should share," Brenden said.

Hydropower is a relatively benign source of electricity compared to coal and nuclear power, he noted.

"That's the box conservationists are putting themselves in," he said.

He added that Montana may also find itself using local endangered species, such as the bald eagle or the state-protected bull trout, as ammunition against measures for downstream endangered species.



Magic Valley duck hunters will count on local birds this season

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

JEROME — This one rests solely on the locally produced ducks.

That has always been true of the first days of the duck season in the Magic Valley but this year it seems there is a specific season on local birds.

That is because of the season split in which the federal government allows a state a certain number of days for hunting within a fixed calendar period. Because duck hunting is traditionally better later in the year — and because zoning was allowed the first time this year — Idaho Fish and Game Department set the closure as late as possible.

Then to accomplish the early hunting and fill the days, the first section of the season is only an eight-day affair — running from this Saturday through next.

There will be very little if any northern migrants in the area during that time, leaving only local resident birds to bear the brunt of the harvest.

The department's various wildlife management areas provided some good reproduction again this year but by and large, Magic Valley's total brood success is expected to be down.

"That's because the smaller reservoirs and stock ponds weren't available due to the drought and we lost some ground because of that," Craig Kvale, Region4 wildlife manager, said.

But Kvale said information from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service indicates that the continental population has a little better year — something in the area of five percent better. "Statistically, that isn't a very large increase so the service simply is calling prospects for this season the same as last year."

Dale Turnipseed, who oversees department holdings in Region 4, said Idaho is taking a new tack in its banding program. Under federal cooperation, the state bands several hundred ducks a year as part of continuing management.

Previously, most banding was completed in the winter after the season was over. The ducks were baited into a trap. Now, the banding is accomplished in the summer before the young birds have reached maturity.

"This gives us an idea of where birds taken in other parts of the country were produced not where they were wintering," Turnipseed points out. "This type of information allows us to justify our management and hunting regulations better. And it definitely has caused us to intensify our attention to local production more."

Duck hunters are reminded that all hunters 17 and over must have an Idaho state migratory bird stamp. All hunters 16 and older must have a federal stamp.

All duck and goose hunting now must be done with steelshot nationwide. Guns must not have capacity to hold more than three shells or be plugged to that limit.

The daily bag limit is four birds under the following restrictions: three mallards, of which no more than one may be a female; one pintail; or two canvasbacks or two redheads or a combination of one each.

State seeks comment on bear plan

Task force will help develop 5-year agenda

BOISE — Idaho bear hunters will be contacted for maximum input over the next several months as the Idaho Department of Fish and Game readies its black bear management five-year plan.

It already has started with the Idaho Fish and Game News, a quarterly tabloid published by the department, being mailed directly to purchasers of 1990 hunting licenses.

During the next eight months, department employees will work with bear hunters and others interested in black bears to develop the plan.

The department will be collecting input through a telephone survey and public meetings.

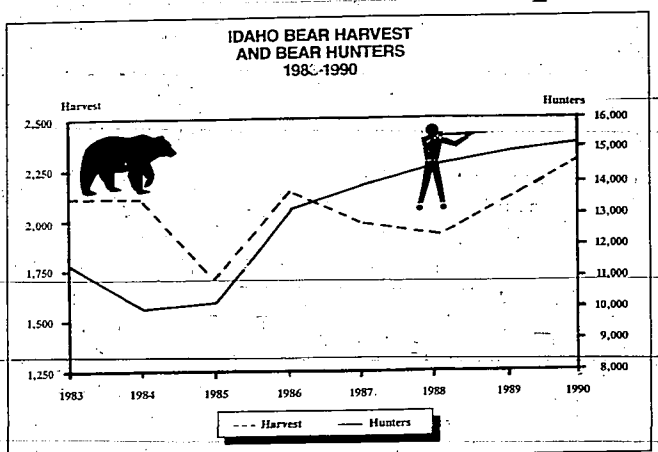
Written comments also will be submitted on a clip-out form printed in the news.

The department's Wildlife Bureau (Box 24, Boise, 83707) will select about 20 task force members, who will include representatives from hunting groups, environmental organizations and others interested in the future of Idaho bears.

Task force members will meet several times in Boise and must be able to travel at their own expense.

Persons interested in serving on the force or who would like to nominate someone should contact the Wildlife Bureau.

In early December the telephone survey will be conducted. The task force will help develop questions for the survey. The public meetings will be held around the state in January and early February.



Park official likes wolf idea

POCATELLO (AP) — Yellowstone National Park's research chief says it would be "poetic justice" if the endangered wolf returned to the park without the help of man.

But John Varley is convinced federal approval to release wolves there would be accepted better among ranchers and land management agencies.

Varley appeared Thursday at Idaho State University to talk about elk and bison in the park, but spent a good part of his time on wolves. He said he is convinced he heard wolves in Wyoming this summer near Togwotee Pass, southeast of the park.

Then again, researchers have been teased by unconfirmed wolf reports around the area for 25 years, he added.

Varley said the wolf belongs back in the park, returning one missing link; a predator native to the area before man blasted and trapped it out of existence there.

Congress is still trying to hammer out a plan for reintroducing the wolf to Yellowstone. The Senate last month appropriated $348,000 to study reintroduction, but that has to be reviewed by a joint conference committee.

Many experts say wolves will inevitably return to Yellowstone on their own. They have been reported in the Centennial Mountains, about 120 miles from the park, officials say.

If they get within 100 miles of Yellowstone, they will eventually populate it because it is prime habitat with a glut of game such as elk, Varley said.

If wolves return naturally, Varley said, "I think it's fair to say we would welcome them with open arms."

An unannounced return would create a kind of "wolf hysteria" that does not do them any good.

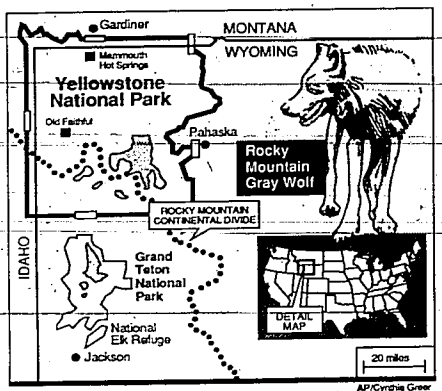
What will happen when the large elk herd and the wolf start sharing the same turf?



Interests pan plan to draw down level

RICHLAND, Wash. (AP) — A proposed two-year moratorium on new water withdrawals from the Columbia and Snake rivers drew harsh criticism at a Northwest Power Planning Council hearing on ways to protect salmon.

Even the council member who suggested the moratorium as a way of saving water for fish passage, Ted Bottiger, expressed doubts. Bottiger said the proposed moratorium on water withdrawals could affect Yakima Indian Nation efforts to expand fish-hatchery programs.

"The moratorium on water withdrawal will stop almost all future growth in industry, agriculture, recreation and ironically, even wildlife improvements," said Randy Staudacher of the Tri-City Industrial Development Council.

Sawtooth Forest putting on a show

TWIN FALLS — The fall display of color dominates the Sawtooth National Forest with the brightest evident at the higher elevations.

Enjoyable Indian summer weather are drawing visitors for hiking or afternoon picnics.

Visitors are urged to wear bright colored clothing since hunting seasons are open in many areas of the forest.

Hunters are reminded it is illegal to discharge a firearm within 150 yards of a developed site — campgrounds, summer home areas, ski areas and picnic sites.

Personel use firewood permits are valid through Nov. 30. However, since early snow could limit access to some cutting areas, woodcutters are advised to get in supplies as soon as possible.

Camping fees also have been discontinued on the Burley district since water is no longer available.

East Fork of Baker Creek, Castle Creek and Thompson Creek areas have been closed to motorized vehicles on the Ketchum district.

The Bald Mountain trail remains closed from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. on all days but Sunday.

Water will be available at handpumps in many areas through October.

A free travel plan map, available at all Sawtooth offices, identifies trails and areas open to two-wheel motorize vehicles and also showsseasonal road closures and other travel restrictions.

Visitors are reminded the Sawtooth Wilderness is closed to all motorized behicles, including mountain bikes and motorcycles.

say traditions can change. "We're trying to stop hunts that are biologically unjust or ethically unacceptable. We think sport hunting is wrong. We don't think people who sport hunt are bad."

Pacelle said nuisance animals can be dealt with on a case-by-case basis, but that "sending hunters into the woods to slaughter healthy, non-nuisance animals is just stupid."

The fund is suing the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to stop grizzly bear hunting in Montana.

It also led the fight to stop Montana's sport hunting of bison that wandered into the state from Yellowstone National Park.

He said the group also may try to stop black bear hunts in prime grizzly habitat, and the hunting of sandhill cranes and tundra swans. But, he said it would be "politically and legally" impossible to stop deer and elk hunting in Montana.

Pacelle said his group will continue its scrutiny of Montana's hunting seasons, which he said "point out a pattern of mismanagement by the Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks."

Hunters are "a distinct and shrinking minority" nationally, he said.

Bullets

less of a point. This design is often used to add weight to a particular bullet without adding to its length.

This design still enjoys a respectable ballistic coefficient, nearly matching the down range results of the pointed bullets. The round points of this style are also less susceptible to damage from handling.

The "flat nose" and "round nose" designs are the fat boys. With only a slight ogive and a meplat just below caliber, these bullets can carry a lot of weight but suffer substantially from a poor ballistic performance.

These designs have also been credited with good expansion qualities and brush-busting capabilities the latter of which is probably somewhat overrated.

The flat nose bullets are also used in tubular magazines to prevent accidental discharge.

With the need for expansion in big game hunting applications, some bullets have special modifications to improve this expansion.

Nosler uses a plastic ballistic tip which is driven back into the core to initiate expansion. Other manufacturers use metal tips which perform in a similar manner.

The hollow point is another design that creates radical expansion. But it also limits penetration, increasing the chances of superficial wounds. This makes the hollow point a questionable choice for use on big game animals.

The thickness of the jacket is also a serious consideration in a hunting bullet. Some bullets are constructed with a thin, fragile jacket to allow expansion, and break up on varmint sized game.

Big game bullets need heavier jackets to hold the bullet together for greater penetration. This is why most .22, and the light .24 and .25 caliber bullets—which are designed for varmint hunting—should not be used on medium to large game.

Though expansion is important, it is just as critical that the bullet retain as much of its original weight as possible.

Some bullet designs address this problem by dividing the core of the bullet into two sections. The forward sections expands while the rear section holds the bullet together.

The proper bullet design may not solve all your shooting woes, but it can improve the chances of a clean accurate shot.

Stock prices dampen amid worries over corporate profits

The Associated Press

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 17.44 points to 2,946.33, wiping out most of Tuesday's 21.02-point gain. The average fell 69.77 points from last Thursday through Monday.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by nearly 2 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume came to an estimated 186.60 million shares as of 4 p.m. EDT, against 170 million at the same point in the previous session.

The market has been on the defensive since last week as traders brace for earnings reports from a wide variety of companies for the third quarter of the year.

So far there has been little evidence that profits are pulling out of the slump that set in more than two years ago.

Hopes persist on Wall Street that the beneficial effects of improving business conditions will begin to show up before too much longer on businesses' bottom lines.

Investors' mood wasn't helped by a weak bond market. Prices of long-term Treasury bonds fell about $10 for each $1,000 in face value, raising their yields to around 7.91 percent.

The company announced a series of restructuring moves, including cost-cutting measures and the planned sale of eight businesses it considers "non-strategic."

Ford Motor dropped X to 29X. The company said it expects to post a larger loss for the third quarter than it did in the second, and also faces likely losses for the fourth quarter and the year as a whole.

Elsewhere in the auto group, General Motors lost 1X to 37X and Chrysler was down X at 10X.

Other losers among the blue chips included General Electric, down 1X at 65X; Philip Morris, down 1X at 70X; Exxon, down X at 59X; International Business Machines, down X at 97X, and Boeing, down X at 48X.

Nordstrom plunged 8X to 33X as the most active issue in the over-the-counter market. On Tuesday the retailing concern projected flat earnings for the fiscal quarter that ends Oct. 31.

IMF sees modest world recovery coming

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — After posting the slowest annual growth in nearly a decade, the world economy will rebound modestly next year as the United States recovers from recession, the International Monetary Fund predicted Wednesday.

In its annual world outlook, the IMF said eastern Europe will turn the corner in 1992 and experience economic growth after a tough initial stage of transformation from communism to a free-market system. There is nothing but uncertainty, however, for the crumbling Soviet economy, the report said.

"There is no indication yet of circumstances that would reverse (the) decline" in Soviet output, Michael Mussa, director of the IMF's department of research, said at a briefing before the report was released.

The IMF provides loans and advice to help developing countries cope with economic problems. Its outlook was issued as the world's top bankers and economists gathered for the IMF's annual meeting in Bangkok.

The IMF projected that world inflation would ease from 5 percent last year to 3.8 percent next year, largely because oil prices have fallen since the Gulf War. But it said the United States and Britain may have to tighten monetary policies if economic growth brings the threat of higher prices.

"The world economy appears to be poised for a relatively moderate rebound in 1992, with output rising by 2.75 percent and world trade growing by 5 percent," the report said.

Recovery from recession in the United States, Canada and Britain, the drop in oil prices and the end of the Kuwait crisis all will contribute to improvement in 1992, the report said. World growth is expected to be only 1 percent this year, the lowest rate in nine years.

The IMF said the fastest growing region next year will be the Middle East, rebuilding after the Gulf War, followed by Asia, which is home to many of the world's economic success stories of the past decade.

NOTICE OF REGULAR RULE-MAKING AND REPEAL OF EXISTING RULES
SUBJECT: Mileage Use Fee Administration
ACTION: This action, under Docket No. B22-9101, Chapter B, Rules 21, 22, and 29, of the Idaho Transportation Board involves the regular adoption of an amended rule and repeal of existing rules governing the administration of use fees that are assessed on commercial vehicles on Idaho highways.
AUTHORITY: In compliance with Section 67-5203(a)(1), Idaho Code, notice is hereby given that the Idaho Transportation Board has undertaken regular rule-making procedures. The proposed action is authorized pursuant to Sections 49-201, 49-434, and 49-436, Idaho Code.
DESCRIPTIVE SUMMARY: The following is a descriptive summary of the substance of the regular actions and of the principal issues involved.
Under this proposed rule-making, 39.B.22 is being revised to incorporate language from two other rules, 39.B.21 and 39.B.29, and also include information from legislation, House Bill 221, passed by the 1991 Legislature regarding multiple weight reporting requirements. Substantive changes include: The word "owner" was changed to "carrier." "Suspension of Registration" was added to the definitions and the word "rescind" was changed to "suspension." "Revocation of Registration" was also added stating that if a carrier refuses to comply with a suspension notice within 15 days of receipt of the suspension notice, or fails to file an appeal, the registration will be revoked. A section on "Enforcement" was included which allows Port of Entry employees to detain trucks that have suspended or revoked registration, and prohibits carriers from purchasing trip permits for such vehicles. Another section was added listing the actions that can be taken by the Registration Services Manager on penalty waivers. Multiple weight reporting requirements in Sections 21, 22 and 23 of the rule are based on House Bill 221. THE ACES ON BRIDGE

BOBBY WOLFF

Dear Mr. Wolff:

I open one diamond, partner bids one heart and my RHO bids one spade. If I double at this point, is it a penalty double or an informative double?

Took My Bid, Wichita Falls, Texas

ANSWER: Your double, in this case, is a penalty double. You are promising excellent spades (at least four), a good hand, few hearts, and a desire to punish the overcaller at the one-level.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

Is it ever wise for a pre-emptor to bid again after the opponents compete? After two passes, partner opened four spades. Next hand bid five hearts, passed to my partner, who then bid five spades.

Solo Flyer, Raleigh, N.C.

ANSWER: It's dangerous to say it can never be wise to make any bid. Sometimes bad bids achieve good results. As a practical matter, a pre-emptor should send his message with his first salvo. Further competition should be at his partner's discretion.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

What is an asking bid?

Twenty Questions, Birmingham, Ala.

ANSWER: An asking bid is a method by which a player can ask and receive information about specific controls held by partner. It was developed in the early days of contract bridge and enjoyed sporadic popularity but is seldom used by today's experts.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

My RHO opens one no-trump. I pass and LHO bids two diamonds. This is alerted and explained as a transfer to hearts (Jacoby transfer). If partner doubles, does this mean he has diamonds or is he doubling for takeout?

Double Transfer, Pensacola, Fla.

ANSWER: In general, doubles of artificial bids show length and strength in the suit. They are useful in directing or suggesting leads, in competing for a part-score, and sometimes in finding a profitable sacrifice.

Dear Mr. Wolff:

If I open one club and jump to three no-trump over partner's one heart, how many HCP do I promise?

Big Tickets, Memphis, Tenn.

ANSWER: Since partner has promised only six HCP, you should have 20 HCP or very close to it. Some prefer to use this jump with fewer HCP, but in compensation they guarantee a running club suit (e.g., ♠ A-7, ♥ 10-2, ♦ K-J, ♣ A-K-Q-10-9-8-6).

Send bridge questions to The Aces, P.O. Box 12363, Dallas, Texas 75225, with self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE — BOBBY WOLFF

— Thomas Fuller.

"Can't get one bigger than this," remarked East as he won the first trick. It wasn't until the post-mortem that he recognized that he had made a mistake.

The play of dummy's spade king at trick one produced dramatic results. East won greedily and returned the eight to dummy's queen. A club was led to South's 10 and West's queen, but West was stuck. He knew the true spade position, so he couldn't afford to cash his spade jack. He postponed the inevitable by exiting with a heart. Dummy won, West's club ace was knocked out, and it was now or never for the jack of spades. West cashed it reluctantly to hold South to nine tricks.

East should have signaled with his spade eight at trick one instead of winning his ace. When West wins the first club, he returns a spade to East's ace, and a third round of spades beats the game. The defense gets three spades instead of two, and South is left with only eight tricks.
